Roosevelt, Off To U. S., Says New Era Born For Americas

Montevideo Hails Him With Flowers

Text of President's Address—Page 7.

By the Associated Press.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Dec. 3.—President Roosevelt sailed homeward tonight after completing a peace mission which took him to three Latin-American capitals.

Before embarking on the cruiser Indianapolis for Charleston, S. C., he told President Gabriel Terra and other officials who honored him at a luncheon that "a new era of friendship and confidence among the Americas" had been born at the Pan-American conference here in 1933.

An enormous throng estimated unofficially at fully one-third of Montevideo's population of 600,000 packed the broad quays for five blocks, under a mellow summer sun, as the United States Chief Executive took leave of the Uruguayan president.

Receiving Uruguayan and United States newspapermen in his cabin just before the Indianapolis sailed at 5 p. m. (3:30 p. m. E. S. T.), Mr. Roosevelt said he felt his "good neighbor" policy—which has been hailed throughout Latin America as a major change in United States diplomacy—was no longer merely his, but had been taken up by all the American republics.

Trinidad Only Stop.

Hereafter, he declared, it should be called an unanimous American policy.

Montevideo was the President's last important stop on the trip which took him to Rio de Janeiro and then to Buenos Aires, where he addressed the first session of the inter-American peace conference, a parley which grew out of his initiative.

On the way to Charleston, Mr. Roosevelt said, the Indianapolis will stop only for refueling at Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, and he will not go ashore. When the cruiser halted there en route to Rio de Janeiro, President Roosevelt said he hoped to visit the British-owned island on his return journey.

On his arrival from Buenos Aires, Mr. Roosevelt found a huge throng near the dock, braving a chilly rain and wind which subsided later in the day.

Flowers Shower on Car.

President Terra smiled widely, embraced Mr. Roosevelt and escorted him, with the aid of Mr. Roosevelt's son, James, to a waiting car.

For three hours the two Presidents drove through the city's streets and to its beaches, acclaimed by throngs along the route.

There was little cheering, however, for that is contrary to Uruguayan custom. Instead, the populace showered flowers on the Presidential car and waved small flags.

In some places spectators ran into the streets ahead of the automobile procession, but police pushed them back.

Speaking at the luncheon at President Terra's palace, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"I believe that when history comes to be written the origin of the new American era will be placed here in the memorable year 1933.

"Truly, it is an inspiration for the average citizen of all our republics that that conference is giving back its fruits in terms of achievement for the people of the world."

He asserted "no one is entitled to more credit for this new day" than President Terra, who he said "labored unceasingly and generously both as host and as statesman for the success of that conference."

He invited President and Senora Terra to visit him, as he had invited the Presidents of Brazil and Argentina.

Calls Roosevelt a "Master."

Mrs. Roosevelt, 7,000 miles away in the United States, was toasted by President Terra.

"I raise my glass," he said, "in toast to Mrs. Roosevelt, whom I see in my mind, following day by day, and with increasing emotion, your triumphal journey to these friendly republics:

"To the companion of your days, a kindly and a generous woman."

He described President Roosevelt as a "past master" in the "revolutionary economic school" to which he said Uruguay's administration adhered.

President Roosevelt, in his speech, toasted President Terra and Senora Terra, who attended the luncheon.

"It has touched me deeply," he said, "that you have proposed a toast to Mrs. Roosevelt. She was deeply disappointed that she could not come with me and she will be happy to know of your courtesy and of your thought of her.

"I lift my glass to the good health and happiness of you and Senora de Terra, and to the continued prosperity, happiness, and progress of the people of the republic of Uruguay."

Pitt to Represent East in Rose Bowl Contest January 1

The University of Pittsburgh, rated as the "dark horse" among teams considered eligible to represent the East in the Rose Bowl game at Pasadena January 1, has been invited and has accepted the invitation, the Associated Press reported last night.

The invitation to Pittsburgh was extended by Washington University, Pacific Coast Conference champions, who will represent the West in the bowl game.

The University of Alabama and Louisiana State University had been the co-favorites to receive the invitation from Washington University, with earlier reports giving Pitt only slight consideration.

Pitt thus will make its fourth trip to the Rose Bowl as the East's representative. In three previous bowl games, Pittsburgh lost on each occasion, bowing to Stanford, 7-6 in 1928; to Southern California, 47-14, in 1930, and to Southern California, 35-0, in 1933.

Rebel Planes Bomb Madrid Sector Twice

Damage Reported Slight; 2 Forces Battle for Capital Suburb.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Dec. 3.—Fascist planes bombed Madrid twice today while opposing infantry forces were locked in battles for possession of the city's western suburbs.

The raiders loosed a score of explosive bombs in the Rosales area and in Retiro Park, near government artillery emplacements.

The roar of the exploding bombs mingled with the boom of artillery fire concentrated on the rear guard of the forces battling in the Casa de Campo, along the Manzanares River bank, and in the Moncloa and Pozuelo-Aravaca sectors.

Road Blockade Is Goal.

In contrast to three Fascist air raids which killed at least 56 inhabitants of Madrid the day before, today's bombings did not cause appreciable damage.

Outside Madrid, massed government forces strove to cut the communications line between the advance units of Gen. Francisco Franco's men and their rear.

Madrid forces were hard pressed in the Pozuelo-Aravaca areas with reliable reports indicating Franco was trying to cut the main highway into France leading through the northern Madrid suburb of Tetuan de las Vitorias.

Both the towns of Tetuan and Funcarral, still farther to the north, suffered heavily during the last three days of aerial bombardment.

While salvage workers dug at the debris caused by the latest aerial bombings, the government leaders asserted its forces in the north were advancing "victoriously" on Oviedo, Vitoria and Burgos, the seat of the Fascist junta.

A war ministry report said seven machine guns and 30,000 cartridges were captured in battles at El Lano and La Mata near San Martin de Gurulles in the Grado area.

Civilians Evacuated.

The civilian population of Grado was evacuated before the government drive, it was asserted.

(Reports from Bilbao, Spain, said Basque militiamen, fighting in the service of the Madrid government, encircled Villarreal and were within striking distance of Vitoria which their planes bombed.)

Militia leaders reported back from the front that their columns were threatening Vitoria and Burgos itself. They asserted one enemy column sent from Vitoria was routed in fierce fighting around Isuschiza and Villareal.

Mayors Fight To Halt Cuts In U. S. Relief

$5,500,000 Estimated as Daily Need to Care for Unemployed.

By Felix Bruner.

With a new Federal relief crisis imminent, because of lack of funds to carry on the program, the annual drive for a new appropriation, which would total hundreds of millions of dollars and probably upset budget balancing plans, got under way yesterday.

A committee of mayors, heads of some of the Nation's largest cities, cabled President Roosevelt a protest against plans of the Works Progress Administration to make drastic cuts in relief rolls and emphasized their own inability to care for the unemployed.

According to information in the hands of the executive committee of the United States Conference of Mayors, work relief funds, even under a curtailed program, will be exhausted by January 20. The mayors planned an immediate drive for huge new appropriations.

200,000 Cut Planned.

The last Congress appropriated $1,450,000,000 for relief during the current year. According to the mayors, who are headed by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York, this money was little more than half enough. If their program—which calls for a continued expenditure by the WPA alone of $5,500,000 every day—it would be necessary for Congress to vote a deficiency appropriation of nearly $900,000,000, in addition to whatever appropriation may be made for the next fiscal year.

Besides LaGuardia, mayors attending the conference were Edward J. Kelly, Chicago; Frederick W. Mansfield, Boston; Neville Miller, Louisville; S. Davis Wilson, Philadelphia; Harold H. Burton, Cleveland; Cornelius D. Scully, Pittsburgh; M. C. Ellenstein, Newark. Representatives also were present from Milwaukee, Baltimore and St. Paul.

The WPA program calls for a cut in relief rolls of about 200,000 by the middle of this month. This would be in addition to 250,000 on drought relief, about 60,000 of whom would be taken over by the Resettlement Administration. This would bring the total relief figure down to about 2,200,000, compared with a high last January of about 3,000,000.

Mayor Wilson of Philadelphia was particularly outspoken in his demands for continuation of the present rate of spending. He contended that employable unemployed could not be kept at work with an expenditure of less than $5,500,000 daily and that the proposed curtailment of the program would at best extend the available funds only about five days.

Group Sees Williams.

Wilson proposed that the present rate of spending be continued and said that the mayors would undertake to persuade Congress to make an additional appropriation by January 15, when he estimated funds would be exhausted if the present rate continues.

The Council of Mayors always has been enthusiastic about the Federal program which takes the burden off the States and cities. They conducted a drive similar to the present one last year, resulting in the $1,450,000,000 appropriation. The previous Congress appropriated $4,880,000,000 for various relief purposes. Some of this fund has been spent during the current year in addition to the latest appropriation.

The mayors presented their problem first to Aubrey Williams, assistant WPA administrator, who was acting in the absence of Harry L. Hopkins. They said they had obtained an agreement from Williams that no needy unemployed person would be dismissed. They London (Friday), Dec. 4.—Great Britain's precedent-breaking monarch, stanch in the face of demands he give up his throne or Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, sped early today to a rendezvous with the woman the empire's strongest forces said he must not marry as long as he is England's King.

A swift series of conferences between Edward VIII, his prime minister, and the Queen Mother apparently failed to break the strong-willed ruler's determination to live his private life as he chooses.

Speeding from Buckingham Palace shortly before dawn, he drove to his secluded lodge at Fort Belvedere, where Mrs. Simpson, alone save for servants, waited throughout the night while Edward argued their destinies.

At the end of 48 hours the King still was defiant of the ultimatum Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, arch enemy of the ruler's marriage to a twice-divorced woman, laid before the King—that he and his cabinet would resign unless Edward bowed to their will.

Baldwin Withholds Comment in House.

An attempt to bring the crisis before Parliament failed when Baldwin arose in the afternoon and said quietly he "had no statement to make," indicating the young ruler had won the first round in a battle which many believed might have forced his abdication.

From Fort Belvedere, where he spent the early part of the day with Mrs. Simpson and the Duke and Duchess of York, the King rushed back for an early evening heart-to-heart talk with his mother, Queen Mary, in Marlborough House.

He did not remain for dinner, as did the Duke and Duchess of York, heirs presumptive to the throne should he abdicate, but went immediately to Buckingham Palace for a 50-minute session with the obdurate prime minister—the second in two days and the third this week.

The prime minister emerged from the palace with a weary and stern visage and proceeded directly to the House of Commons, where he remained closeted with parliamentary leaders and colonial representatives for some time discussing the future of the Crown and the British Empire.

Baldwin was expected to go before Parliament again tomorrow, but whether he would be in any better position to make a statement was his secret.

The King, after Baldwin's departure, returned to Marlboro house for another long talk with Queen Mary while his brothers—the Dukes of York, Gloucester and Kent—held a separate consultation in York's Piccadilly residence.

With Mrs. Merryman.

When Edward first returned to London for his night-time conferences he brought with him the Duke and Duchess of York and left Mrs. Simpson in Fort Belvedere with her "Aunt Bessie"—Mrs. D. B. Merryman, of Washington, D. C., who later was driven alone to Mrs. Simpson's lavish Cumberland Terrace home.

If Prime Minister Baldwin

1,500 Observe Pennsylvania Polls Triumph

Guffey Tells Crowd State Is 'Out of Wilderness;' Earle Attends.

By Sidney Olson.

The good burghers of Pennsylvania, flushed with the first Democratic victory in 80 years, assembled 1,500 strong in the gold ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel last night to hymn praise of their leaders.

At another table the men and women practiced blowing smoke rings. Several men frankly and unashamedly slept.

The dinner had been scheduled for 7. At 7:30 there were three tables filled, and a scattering of party workers in the rest of the room. By 8 the room began to fill up, and when Gov. George H. Earle and Senator Joseph F. Guffey arrived, with considerable applause and some fanfare, the band was playing, appropriately, "I'll Sing You a Thousand Love Songs." The party was on.

By 9:30 the dessert came in, raspberry ice, carried in on trays bearing ice carved in symbolic shapes, such as a dead elephant, and soon after the speeches began.

Both Annoying.

The best commentary on the speeches came from a reporter. An old lady with bright red hair in a new tight permanent wave came over to the press table, shushing angrily:

"We can't hear the speakers. You're annoying us."

The reporter answered:

"Well, the speakers are annoying us."

The party, according to word passed around, was to be the push-off for the 1940 Presidential boom of Gov. Earle, sometimes called Mr. Roosevelt's "Pennsylvania heir-apparent."

There seemed to be dozens of speeches, but an actual count showed only eight and a lot of announcements. All of the announcements were telegraphed regrets from various dignitaries who had been invited to appear at the dinner, including Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Eddie Dowling, stage comedian, who was slated to be master of ceremonies but didn't show up, and a number of others.

Secretary Ickes sent in his stead a long telegram asking Senator Guffey to introduce a bill in the next Congress to make Vermont a ntaional park, in which wild-life, including any extant Republicans, could be preserved.

Quinn Makes Speech.

Joseph F. Quinn, chairman of the Pennsylvania Democratic campaign committee, of Washington, made a long speech in which he said:

"What makes victories victorious? When the man and the boy—I mean the man and the girl—anyway, the couple who is willing to make sacrifices is needed on the firing line, for politics is a business."

No one could figure this out immediately, but Mr. Quinn was heartily applauded. So was everyone else, including more than a score of Pennsylvania congressmen, who were introduced from the floor.

Strikes Leave 100,000 Idle; Supply Shortage Closes Mills

Detroit Auto Factories Have 72,000 Out of Work as Materials Are Used Up; A Few Labor Disputes Settled, but Major Battles Hold.

By the Associated Press.

More than 100,000 persons were idle in the United States yesterday because of strikes.

Several scattered labor disputes were settled, but major controversies curtailed production at important automobile and glass manufacturing centers and hindered maritime commerce.

The Ford Motor Co.'s Lincoln-Zephyr division shut down because of a shortage of frames usually obtained from the strike-bound Midland Steel Products Co. Assembly departments of the Plymouth division of the Chrysler Corporation and parts of the Briggs Manufacturing Co. had previously closed. International President Homer Martin, of the United Automobile Workers of America, estimated 72,000 Detroiters were temporarily jobless in the stalemate.

Marine Workers to Parade.

Striking maritime workers planned mass meetings, parades and demonstrations in San Francisco "to acquaint the people with the real issues" of the walkout that has affected more than 37,000 workers.

President G. W. McCabe, of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, demanded the Libbey-Owens-Ford Co. send spokesmen to Pittsburgh for a conference incident to a strike already involving 7,300 workers. He specifically asked a parley on the "Ottawa situation to prevent it spreading to Toledo." The 6,000 Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. workers have been out for six weeks. The 1,300 employes of the Ottawa, Ill., branch of Libbey-Owens-Ford began a "sit-down" strike Wednesday, claiming a $4,000,000 order from the Chrysler Co. had been shifted there from Pittsburgh to defeat the Pittsburgh strike.

146 Strikers Jailed.

Two agents of the Pennsylvania Department of Welfare went to Reading to investigate conditions in Berks County jail. The capacity of the jail was overtaxed by the arrest of 146 pickets who participated in "lie-down" demonstrations at the Berkshire Knitting Mills.

A truce terminated a "sit-down" strike that affected approximately 5,000 employes of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., at Akron, Ohio.

Thirty-five workers returned to their posts at the Joseph Greenspon's Son Pipe Co., at East St. Louis, Ill., after winning recognition of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers—a Committee for Industrial Organization union—and a five cents an hour wage hike.

Settlement of a 20-day strike affecting 9,000 at the Celanese Corporation of America plant at Cumberland, Md., was termed a "major victory for the Committee for In-

Rayburn Ahead In House Floor Leader Contest

Support by Pennsylvania Caucus Is Assailed by O'Connor, His Rival.

A small, baldish man, with a light fringe of reddish hair around his ears and a rich bass voice, Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, appeared last night to be well on the way to election as the next majority leader of the House of Representatives.

Late in the afternoon, the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation, caucusing at the Mayflower Hotel with Senator Joseph F. Guffey, voted 26 to 1 to support Rayburn as a unit.

Representative Charles I. Feddis was the lone member to hold out against the Rayburn sweep.

The 26 votes from the northern State, added to his solid Southern support, convinced most observers that the battle for the post of Democratic floor-leader, steppingstone to the Speakership, was practically over.

"The Keystone State doesn't hold up the Nation any more . . . The country got along pretty well with no Democrats from Pennsylvania for many years . . . probably better."

In a formal statement, O'Connor said:

"Confident that there is still independence in the House of Representatives and confident that a majority of other State delegations will not be dictated to by political bosses and confident that gentlemen's written pledges are still good, I shall be the next majority floor leader of the House of Representatives."

The statement did not elaborate on the reference to "written pledges."

In a telephone conversation in his office, the short, burly New

Chicago, Dec. 3 (AP).—G. Page 3629, grand champion steer of the thirty-seventh International Livestock Exposition, sold at auction today for $3 a pound on the hoof. The price was the same as that bid for the 1935 grand champion. The purchaser was Charles R. Walgreen, of Chicago.

The grand champion steer weighed 1,020 pounds. His sale added $3,060 to the bank account of the Oklahoma A. and M. College which exhibited him.

Dr. Townsend, 2 Aides Indicted By D. C. Jurors

Pension Leader Accused of Leaving House Inquiry, Failure to Testify.

More than six months after he walked out of a session of a House investigating committee before which he had been subpenaed to testify, Dr. Francis E. Townsend, old-age-pension advocate, was indicted for that act yesterday by the District of Columbia grand jury. Two former officials of his pension organization, the Rev. Clinton Wunder and John B. Kiefer, also were indicted for failure to respond to subpenas to appear before the same committee.

Townsend and his two assistants, with whom he has since quarreled, each face fines up to $1,000 and jail sentences up to one year if they are convicted. They must appear within the next few days and post bond guaranteeing their future appearance in court. No warrants for their arrest were immediately issued, giving them the opportunity to surrender voluntarily.

This new crisis in the stormy career of the small-town doctor who believes the taxpayers should give everyone over 65 a pension of $200 a month follows a controversy in which his organization has been split by dissension and in which it has lost most of whatever influence it may have possessed.

When the investigation which led to the indictments started, however, it was the belief of many

Lawrence of Arabia's Book On Sale—at $500,000 a Copy

The late Col. T. E. Lawrence's (Lawrence of Arabia) barrack tale of a British Tommy became news yesterday when it was learned that the British Foreign Office is deeply concerned about his latest, and last, volume, "The Mint."

Twelve volumes have been printed by Doubleday-Doran and are offered for sale at $500,000 apiece.

Two of the volumes, as copyright laws require, are on file in the Library of Congress, under lock and key and not available for the curious eyes of the public.

Reviewers, and persons with a legitimate interest other than mere reading, are permitted to see the book. But they are watched by an assistant librarian, and are not permitted to quote from it nor even take notes.

A newsman who perused the book yesterday at the library was not impressed with Col. Lawrence's book either as to appearance or content.

Reeking with foul language, it is an interesting record of the minutiae of a soldier's life, relating in long and bitter detail the abuses of top sergeants, the hatefulness of kitchen duty, and other less pleasant fatigue routines of the working soldier.

Lawrence, whose facility with brimstone and sulphur is well known, lays it on heartily in his criticisms of army conditions, but since the abuses he berates have, as he sweepingly admits in the last chapters, been corrected, there is little, it seems, to send Downing street into conniptions.

Lawrence writes so closely, filling every sentence with myriad detail, that he apparently has exhausted his subject within the first few chapters. The remainder is repetitious.

The reason for its being withheld from public printing is that the author's will stated it must not be released until 1950. Probably he placed this restriction on the publication because he names dozens of characters by their right names.

Bound in simple gray cardboard, the book is finely printed. It measures 8 inches by 11 inches by 1 inch. It is kept in a safe with two locked steel doors between it and the outer world.

Its price is explained by Superintendent of the Library Roberts as a means used by the publisher to keep the book out of circulation. In order to protect his copyright privileges the publisher had to have Lawrence's manuscript in print, two volumes on file with the Library, and other volumes on sale to the public. To make sure the public would not buy the book and thus violate the terms of the will, the price was arbitrarily set at $500,000.

Just what would happen if someone offered the publisher $500,000 for a copy Roberts could not surmise. So far, no one has. The book in 1950 will probably sell for about $5—if anyone is interested by that time.

Washington Agencies, Firms Rally to Aid of Post Toy Fund

Rallying to announcement of The Washington Post's 1936 Toy and Doll Fund, the District of Columbia Council of Social Agencies, Peoples Drug Stores, Loew's Theaters, the Terminal Transportation Co. and Washington's Columbia station, WJSV, yesterday volunteered their services to aid in the collection of toys and cash, so that no Washington youngster will go giftless this Christmas.

Distribution of the toys collected by this joint effort will be made on or before Christmas Eve by the District of Columbia Council of Social Agencies, under direction of Mrs. W. A. Roberts, executive secretary of that organization.

Old toys, games, dolls and other playthings contributed by thoughtful Washingtonians will be renovated, repainted and put in perfect condition before distribution under auspices of the playground department and supervision of Miss Sibyl Baker, supervisor of playgrounds.

Joe Mouser, president of the Terminal Transportation Co., volunteered services of his fleet of taxicabs in collecting toys from those who otherwise might be unable to get their gifts to one of the many collection points. A telephone call to Decatur 5130 will bring a Terminal cab to pick up your contribu-

21 Auto Firms Cited by U.S. on Finance Rates

By the Associated Press.

Twenty-one automobile and finance companies were accused by the Federal Trade Commission yesterday of charging almost twice as much interest as they advertised in selling automobiles on the installment plan.

Eight complaints were issued contending the financing plans acually involved interest charges of approximately 12 per cent instead of 6 per cent as advertised.

Manufacturers of many of the leading makes of automobiles were named in the complaints, which accused them of "false and misleading representations" in violation of the unfair competition section of the Trade Commission act.

Defense Issued.

The commission's action evoked a joint statement in New York from the Commercial Credit Co., Commercial Investment Trust Co. and Universal Credit Co., three of the accused finance companies. Defending the interest plan, their statement said the issue was a "technical matter of the phraseology employed in the advertising," with "no element to mislead the public."

At a conference with the commission several weeks ago, the statement continued, the companies contended "the whole question was academic in that the 6 per cent form of advertising had sometime prior thereto been discontinued by them, but that they were and are convinced that the statements under question were wholly accurate.

Companies Listed.

Complaints were issued against the following automobile companies:

Nash Motors Co., General Motors Corporation and its subsidiaries which produce Chevrolet, Olds, Pontiac, Buick and Cadillac cars; Chrysler Corporation and its subsidiaries; Chrysler Sales Corporation and those manufacturing De Soto, Dodge and Plymouth cars; Graham-Paige Motors Corporation; Hudson Motor Car Co., Ford Motor Car Co., Reo Motor Car Co. and Packard Motor Car Co.

Finance Firms.

Finance companies named were:

General Motors Acceptance Corporation, joined with the General Motors group; Commercial Credit Co., joined with Chrysler Corporation and its subsidiaries; Universal Credit Corporation, with Ford Motor Co., and Commercial Investment Trust Corporation, with Graham-Paige Motors Corporation and Hudson Motor Co.

In a statement issued at Kenosha, Wis., C. H. Bliss, vice president in charge of Nash Motor Sales, said his company had discontinued the type of advertising against which the commission complained.

Complaint Explained.

Explaining its complaints, the commission said:

"The financing plans employed actually involve a 6 per cent rate charged on the full amount of the account from the date it begins until it is closed, regardless of the fact the account is amortized in equal monthly payments."

The accused companies were given 20 days to answer the complaints or be subject to an order to cease the practice.

On October 30 the commission announced the Studebaker Corporation, which was not named in yesterday's complaints, had agreed to stop using representations which, the commission said, caused purchasers to believe that its financing plan contemplated the payment of a simple interest rate.

Speculation Over Roosevelt Third Term Persists in Face of Creel Denial.

By Franklyn Waltman

DENIAL by George Creel, war-time czar of public information and now a magazine writer, that President Roosevelt will seek a third term brings into the open the surprising amount of speculation and talk on that topic which has been going on in political circles.

WALTMAN.

This talk commenced the day after the President's unprecedented landslide re-election victory and it has grown in volume during the intervening month. It has reached such a point that it is now generally accepted in political circles that a third term is a possibility. The fact that Mr. Creel's denial that the President cherishes such ambition is treated as news is indicative of the interest in that possibility.

Until the Creel denial, contained in an article in the forthcoming Collier's Magazine, no effort was made by anyone associated in any way with the President or the Administration to discourage such talk. Indeed, the Creel denial, based on a statement which the President is said to have made some time ago to an intimate, by no means closes the door against a third term.

"On January 21, 1941, when a new President takes over, I will be in Hyde Park, having the time of my life."

Mr. Creel's evidence that the President will not seek a third term has been of small comfort to 1940 Presidential aspirants. They would like a more explicit statement from Mr. Roosevelt, and the longer he remains silent on his future plans the greater their discomfort and uneasiness will be.

The astounding and unexpected sweep of the President's victory last month is, of course, the chief reason for the third term talk. But there are others. For instance, many observers believe that, barring the outbreak of war abroad, this country during the next four years will enjoy an unprecedented prosperity and that the standard of living among the lower classes will be lifted to new levels. Thus it is assumed that Mr. Roosevelt in 1940 will be virtually as popular as he was this fall.

This view overlooks the possibility that a runaway boom and credit expansion, along with some of the New Deal devices for improving social conditions, may so raise prices that living costs will outrun wage increases and actually the masses will suffer from a lowered standard of living. In that event, Mr. Roosevelt would undoubtedly become a very unpopular figure. That is one of the problems confronting the President during the the next four years.

Another reason why a third term for Mr. Roosevelt is regarded as at least plausible is his delight in breaking precedents. He has taken pleasure in his reputation that he is no respecter of precedent or tradition. The tradition against a third Presidential term is perhaps the greatest precedent in the Nation. Thus a breaker-of-precedents is expected to be intrigued by laying low the greatest of all precedents.

Established by George Washington, this precedent against a third Presidential term has been challenged only twice—and on each occasion unsuccessfully. Ulysses S. Grant declined to close the door on a third term and had it closed for him by a resolution of disapproval adopted overwhelmingly by the House. But four years after his second term, Grant permitted his name to be presented for the Presidential nomination before the Republican National Convention. He led on 36 consecutive ballots but in the end went down to defeat.

Theodore Roosevelt in 1912 unsuccessfully tried to down this precedent. Had he lived through 1920, however, he might have succeeded. Thus it becomes the turn of another Roosevelt to attempt to achieve what no other President of the United States has attained.

Still another line of reasoning which enters into the third term talk is that Mr. Roosevelt may be forced to make such a "sacrifice" in the interest of party solidarity. It is contended that so diverse are the elements which now make up the Democratic Party and so bitter are the rivalries of leaders of the various groups that only Mr. Roosevelt could hold them together.

The argument is that a large part of the Democratic Party would refuse to follow United Mine Workers' John L. Lewis into a new party or even support him as a Democrat. Gov. George H. Earle, of Pennsylvania, appears to be a better bet for a Roosevelt successor. But Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Gov. Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, also have been prominently mentioned. Conservative Democrats would prefer Secretary of State Cordell Hull or Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia.

There is some substance to the contention that it would be fatal for Mr. Roosevelt to designate an heir presumptive until the last few months of his Administration—and by that time it is expected the fight among the various aspirants will be so bitter that only the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt would quiet the turbulent political waters. Anyway, that is the way this third term talk goes.

And speaking of precedents, is it not about time that the New York Life Insurance Co. should fulfill its quadrennial custom of elevating retiring Presidents and defeated Presidential candidates to its board of directors by appointing Gov. Alf M. Landon?

Wheat Farmers Ask Program Exceeding AAA

By the Associated Press.

Assailing "rugged agricultural individualism," farm leaders from the wheat States yesterday proposed a Federal program—even broader than the old AAA—covering all phases of the industry—"from seeding to decent distribution."

Major planks in their seven-point proposal included adjustment of production, an ever-normal granary, "prudent disposal" of burdensome surpluses, and yield insurance.

M. W. Thatcher, chairman of a sub-committee, which drafted the program, replied "absolutely" when asked if the production adjustment plank meant something similar to the programs held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Amendment "Unnecessary."

Thatcher, who is associated with the Farmers National Grain Corporation, said he did not believe a constitutional amendment necessary to provide authority for production adjustment.

The ever-normal granery, which has been advocated by Secretary Wallace, was described in the resolution as an "efficient warehousing of wheat premium reserves and the storage of wheat for deferred sale —awaiting demand at fair prices."

Another plank urged "reasonable loans against stored wheat upon a collateral basis and made in relation to a fair price, rather than a speculative price." Government loans have been made on cotton and corn, but never on wheat.

Except in special cases, it was suggested that adherence to the soil conservation program, together with yield insurance, be required as qualifications for eligibility to the benefit of the ever-normal granary fair loan program.

The resolution asked the Government to provide administrative expenses and warehousing costs "with a very substantial portion of yield insurance costs" until a system of production and distribution of wheat has been effected which would permit the producer to "manage and conduct" his business.

Security Program Expansion Is Seen

The present social security legislation is "only the beginning" of this country's social program, Walter J. Campbell, chief of the educational division of the Social Security Board, told the Y. M. C. A. Young People's Forum last night.

After discussing the economic maladjustments and present social trends that have "awakened the American people to the fact that society owes a duty" to the victims of our economic system, Campbell said:

"The social security act is not a panacea for all our social ills—it does not mean the destruction of the American system of life—but it is a real significant beginning in the demonstration of our willingness to assume our social responsibilities. It is really only the beginning of a social program that must be carried forward in years to come."

He was questioned by a panel composed of Dr. Howard A. Dawson, of the National Education Association; A. Boyd Hines, of the Community Chest; Walter Bastian, president of the District Bar Association; P. Pierce Riddle, of the American Security & Trust Co., and Russell Greenmann, of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Rockefellers Gave $103,000 To G. O. P. Election Campaign

John D., Jr., Tops List With $70,000; Mrs. J. R. H. Cromwell Donates $50,000 to Democrats; One duPont Aids Socialists.

By the Associated Press.

Senate investigators reported yesterday that John D. Rockefeller, jr., gave $70,000 to Republican campaign funds, while Democratic organizations received $50,000 from Mrs. James R. H. Cromwell, formerly Doris Duke, the tobacco heiress.

Their contributions were included in a list of large donations, compiled by the special Senate committee investigating spending in the recent campaign.

The committee said it hoped to trace the source of most of the $13,000,000 spent by scores of political organizations in the last campaign, as a basis for legislative recommendations to the President and Congress.

Investigators said they expected to seek "far more drastic restrictions" on acmpaign expenditures than those imposed by present law.

The list made public yesterday showed gifts totaling $50,100 from Alfred P. Sloan, jr., of New York, president of General Motors Co., to 15 anti-New Deal agencies.

Total contributions of the Rockefeller family were $103,000. John D. Rockefeller 3d gave $20,000 and Abby A. Rockefeller, of New York, reported $13,000 contributed to the Republican National Committee and other Republican organizations.

Boston, Dec. 3 (AP).—All the du Pont campaign contributions did not go to the Republican Party.

Mrs. Zara duPont, of Cambridge, who says she is a first cousin of Pierre duPont, of the Delaware munitions firm, contributed $50 to the State Socialist Party campaign fund, a report filed at the statehouse showed today.

Miss duPont on several occasions had joined picket lines in garment workers' strikes and is now active on a citizens committee, which protested the "brutality" of Boston police in arresting striking seamen in Boston.

The Delaware duPonts were substantial contributors to the Republican Party.

Mayors Battle Proposed Cuts In Relief Work

followed the conference immediately, however, with their appeal to the President. LaGuardia declined to disclose the nature of the message.

"We examined very carefully the survey made in each city of the unemployment situation," LaGuardia said in a statement. "We find that employment has not kept pace with improved business conditions. Any suggestion of wholesale dismissals or substantial reductions at this time is simply out of the question. Every city is carrying its share and more of the load, and cannot assume additional burdens.

"We have had a full and frank discussion with Mr. Aubrey Williams, acting Works Progress administrator on the absence of Mr. Harry Hopkins. I believed that we have clarified the situation to the extent of getting assurance that such reductions as may have to be made during the months of December and January will be limited to the following classes of WPA employes:

"1. From the administrative staff.

"2. Nonrelief group. (The law allows up to 10 per cent of the workers to be employed from this group.)

"3. Workers having other sources of support.

"If the reductions are kept strictly within these classes, it will be possible for all worthwhile projects in the cities to be sustained. In the meantime, it is the judgment of the executive committee that the number of WPA workers on the rolls in November should be kept.

Survey Is Planned.

"Reductions in the future should be made only as to persons getting regular employment. The conference will continue its efforts along these lines and is preparing a complete survey of the situation for presentation to Congress."

The New York Mayor puffed enthusiastically on a 10-cent corncob pipe as he discussed the problem of keeping the burden of caring for the unemployed in Washington.

Outside the dors of the room in which the mayors met were officials of the Workers Alliance of America, a WPA union. David Lasser, president, said that his organization will submit to Congress a program for a deficiency relief appropriation. Lasser said that if workers are laid off members of his organization will start "sit down" strikes, picketing of WPA offices and sending delegations to the homes of Senators and Representatives. In an open letter to LaGuardia, Lasser offered to cooperate with the mayors.

35,000 Seek Security Jobs; 90% Ineligible

Some 2,000,000 Employers Miss Deadline, Face Possible Fine.

The Social Security Board has far too few registrations of employers under the old-age retirement law, and far too many applications for jobs in the administrative organization, it announced last night.

So many employers have failed to return their applications for identification numbers that the Postoffice Department has been asked to check on delinquents. It was estimated, according to the Associated Press, that only some 1,500,000 applications had been returned, while 3,500,000 employers, approximately, are required to comply. The deadline was November 21. An employer who fails to return the blank is subject to a $10,000 fine and a year's imprisonment.

The board said last night that 35,000 applications for jobs are on file and more are arriving at the rate of about 600 daily. It pointed out that the basic staff has been substantially complete for some time.

The board is under Civil Service and practically all employes must be selected from Civil Service rolls. Personnel officers said that because of this requirement fully 90 per cent of the applicants are ineligible.

The board now has some 4,000 employes, of whom about 2,000, many of them holding only temporary positions, are attached to the Baltimore office handling wage records. Abut 1,500 are in the Washington office and 500 in the 68 field offices.

WPA Workers Ask Civil Service Rank

Protesting dismissals in the administrative staff here, members of the WPA Lodge met last night in the Hamilton Hotel and demanded civil service status for WPA workers.

Asking that there be no dismissals at the present time, the lodge through its president, Arthur Stein, held that under civil service the workers would have the first chances at new jobs in recognition of the fact they had served the Government for three years and were thoroughly trained.

A civil service examination, noncompetitive, was demanded at once. The lodge further requested establishment of research projects to handle the problems of re-employing dismissed workers.

WPA Writers Strike.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—More than 150 employes of the WPA writers project started a sit-down strike tonight and several hundred WPA musicians held a mass meeting in protest against reported cuts scheduled in the ranks of WPA workers here.

Driver Suicide, Truck Located by Airplane

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Located by a police airplane, a missing Farmingdale, N. Y., truck was found on an isolated road in nearby Hicksville today, its driver dead in the cab clotching a 3,000-word suicide letter.

Police said the missive, apparently written as exhaust fumes filled the cab, indicated the driver, Hebert Royce, 33, of Farmingdale, feared a disease was affecting his mind. The truck, laden with groceries of a Farmingdale wholesale firm, was found after Nassau County police, fearing it had been held up, sent up the plane.

members of Congress and others that the Townsend organization would wield a great influence in the then-approaching campaign. The House authorized the investigation ostensibly as an inquiry into proposed legislation, but, according to Townsendites, its purpose was largely to weaken the organization in the campaign.

Townsend was indicted by the grand jury on two counts, one of them charging that he walked out of the committee hearing without the permission of the committee, and the other that he refused to answer questions.

The aging doctor left the committee room after he had been refused permission to read a prepared statement. He strode out between his two attorneys, former Senator Thomas Hardwick, of Georgia, and Sheridan Downey, of California. So sudden was his move that attempts to stop him failed. The committee, headed by Representative Bell (Democrat), Missouri, debated for days before it finally resolved to place the case before the grand jury.

Wunder, who formerly was Eastern manager for the Townsend organization, is a former evangelist. He left the organization shortly after the old-age pension convention in Cleveland last summer when Townsend joined forces with the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, former Huey Long "share-the-wealth" leader, and Representative William Lemke, Union Party candidate for President. Kiefer was Central States manager. Both he and Wunder participated in the convention, but left the organization shortly afterward.

The first major split-up in the organization came shortly before the opening of the investigation by the Bell committee, when Robert E. Clements, secretary and cofounder of the movement, resigned. Clements gave important testimony before the committee.

When he was called to testify, Townsend told the committee that he did not want them to avoid any questions and that he was willing to tell everything he knew about the organization. He was angered, however, by refusal of the committee to permit him to volunteer testimony.

"In view of the unfriendly attitude of this committee toward me and my movement, I deem it my duty no longer to testify or attend. I am tired of this inquisition. I will not appear or testify again unless I am brought here under arrest."

Later he made the statement that he would "rot in jail" before he would appear before the committee.

Notification of the indictments was formally sent to Hardwick yesterday as Townsend's lawyer. No intimation of the next move has been given, but it was expected an effort will first be made to have the indictments set aside.

Worked Against Bill.

Townsend narrowly escaped arrest in Cleveland following his convention when charges were made that funds had been misused. On the basis of charges brought against the doctor, Smith made an eloquent appeal at the convention for a "defense fund." His appeal was so successful that hundreds of old people literally struggled with one another in their scramble to pour money upon the convention hall stage. Several thousand dollars were raised in a few minutes.

One of the avowed purposes of the pension organization was the defeat of Committee Chairman Bell, who was a candidate for re-election to Congress, but Bell was re-elected. Townsend endorsed Lemke for President in States where his name appeared on the ballot and Alf M. Landon in other States. Most of his candidates for Congress met with lack of success equal to that of the candidates he endorsed for President.

English Masses Back Edward, Reporter Says

Election Would Result in King's Victory, Asserts Spectator Writer.

Edward VIII's determination to make "Wally" Simpson his and England's Queen may plunge that country into a general election on the question of "the King and the King's purpose," but it would result in an unequivocal indorsement of the monarch's wishes, according to S. K. Ratcliffe, American correspondent of the London Spectator.

Interviewed yesterday at a mo- hour in British history, I declared:

: no doubt Edward is immen- opular with the masses. If the ier were put to the issue now he would sweep the electorate. Unfortunately, the crisis comes at a time when the world faces cataclysm and any weakening of the crown's prestige would shatter England's leadership."

In a radio broadcast for the Columbia Broadcasting System Ratcliffe recalled the words of George Bernard Shaw, the Irish satirist, who said, in effect: Strange, but we know very little about the King.

"Now we know Shaw was right," Ratcliffe declared and he launched into an explanation of the hush-hush policy of the British press.

"The hush-hush policy was a voluntary censorship," the British newsman said, explaining reticence always enshrouds the royal family. In this particular case, however, he declared the powerful Newspaper Owners Association was responsible for the silence. "This was an obvious and natural decision," he added.

Two factors, in he opinion of the British correspondent, brought about the sudden "ungagging" of the conservative English press. One was the "snowball-down-the-hill" velocity of the American press reports; the other the awareness of the nearness of the coronation ceremony.

Outlining the constitutional issues involved Ratcliffe stated:

"When Edward, then Prince of Wales, came to the throne, one statement was repeatedly made that the King must perforce marry a royal princess, not a commoner. This is not so. The only limiting condition imposed upon the King by the act of settlement was that a monarch's consort must be of the Protestant faith."

That high legal authorities in England should now be found to declare marriage of the monarch should be blessed by the privy council or the cabinet, is a new angle, according to the British correspondent.

Contrasting this legal or constitutional matter is one of high importance—the attitude of the church, Ratcliffe continued. The Church of England elevates the sacrament of marriage and preaches that a person linked with divorce should be debarred from the communion table.

"Now, as you see, a grave difficulty presents itself. Edward is head of the Church of England. What then would be the attitude of church leaders at coronation if it were understood the King's purpose was to marry his divorced friend? What, in that event, would royal supremacy mean?"

Discussing the political implications, Ratcliffe sought to correct the impression that resignation of the cabinet in this crisis would be too drastic an action.

"Many of you think that this drastic action need not, and should not, follow, but it should be borne in mind that Premier Stanley Baldwin is near to retirement. He has been awaiting an opportunity to resign and the opportunity is here. Certainly he would not be the man to pilot the nation through an issue of such great import as the Crown versus Parliament."

Ratcliffe said the problem is unique in British history and added it was the more baffling because there is "no precedent to guide."

"One thing seems clear, however," Ratcliffe asserted, "and that is the resoluteness of His Majesty's purpose. The King stands by his choice and it may well be that he bases his determination upon the letter of the royal marriage act."

Ratcliffe then discussed "alternatives." Continuance of the existing arrangement and friendship with its existing accompaniments he dismissed as "out of the question."

"The stupendous publicity has made that impossible," he added. Morganatic marriage? That may be the solution with European royal houses, but in England it is "unknown and would be unheard of," he said. He then alluded to the suggestion made by the London News Chronicle that Edward might marry the Baltimorean under his title as Duke of Cornwall. This would entail renunciation of all future claims to the throne and the sucession would then pass to the Duke of York and his daughter.

Marriage and insistence upon the principle that the King's consort be not queen, would involve "a multiple of conflicts and crises undreamed of," Ratcliffe said.

Unusual close-ups of King Edward VIII and Mrs. Wallis Simpson, who met yesterday at Fort Belvedere, following which the Duke of York and King Edward conferred at Buckingham Palace. The British ruler later met with Prime Minister Baldwin who, it was reported, had prepared a bill that would make the Duke of York the sovereign, should the King abdicate.

King Tells Mother He Will Wed, Keep Throne

was determined to force a showdown on the unprecedented situation yesterday, he did not follow through in the face of a growing popular sentiment that the King should be allowed to choose his own life partner.

Baldwin, his face etched with worry, went to the House of Commons, where the members tensely awaited some statement from him on the future course of the British Empire and throne.

In accordance with a previously arranged plan, Clement R. Attlee, opposition leader, who was understood to have sided with the Prime Minister in opposing any match between the King and the divorcee, arose and asked:

"I would like to ask the Prime Minister on private motion a question—whether any constitutional difficulties have arisen and whether he has any statement to make."

Slowly Baldwin got to his feet and faced the House.

"I have no statement to make today," he said quietly.

Holds Questions Inexpedient.

"While there does not at present exist any constitutional difficulty, the situation is of such a nature as to make it inexpedient that I should be questioned about it at this time."

The Prime Minister's expressed disinclination to bring the whole grave question into open parliamentary debate, as some thought he would, led quickly to belief the King had found new champions for his romance among his subjects.

With sentiment and the Empire aligned against him, and his cabinet threatening to resign, observers felt the King would have only two courses left—abdication or severance of his association with the former Baltimore belle.

If he should decide he desired Mrs. Simpson's friendship more than the throne of the British Empire, the next in line for the scepter would be his younger brother, the retiring, home-loving Duke of York.

With this eventuality in mind because of Edward's recognized determination to live his private life according to dictates of his own conscience rather than the advice of counsellors, cabinet ministers began drawing up a bill which would make the Duke of York King if the throne should be vacated.

It was learned one of the cence in Commons yesterday was to gain time to complete to gain time to complete plans to force Edward's abdication should he cling to Mrs. Simpson.

Precedent Lacking.

Delving into old records legal advisers of Baldwin found there was no historic precedent for abdication of the King of England except in times of revolution such as those which ousted Charles I and James II.

The only solution, they said, would be for Edward to renounce allegiance to the Church of England—which allegiance is required of sovereigns by the act of succession which took the throne from the Stuarts and gave it to the House of Hanover from which Edward is descended.

Nor would Edward's abdication automatically confer the throne on the Duke of York. A bill passed by Parliament and signed by Edward himself would then be necessary.

Thus the battle between the King and his government simmered down to whether Baldwin could force abdication. The prime minister's apparent strategy was to have everything in readiness in case the King should hold fast to his right to love and live as he chose in defiance of his constituted advisers.

If Edward could not finally become convinced of the necessity for giving up Mrs. Simpson Baldwin then, observers agreed, would rush through the legislation enthroning the Duke and Duchess of York before Edward had a chance to fight back through his popularity with the lower and middle classes—called "the backbone of the empire."

Could Appeal to People.

Even if Edward should dismiss Baldwin and the entire cabinet and summon his friend and supporter, Winston Churchill, to form a new one, it was predicted the Commons still would follow Baldwin.

It would be within Edward's power, however, to dissolve even Parliament itself and appeal to the empire at large for a return to absolute monarchy—a course given at least a fighting chance for success because of the love most subjects profess for their democratic bachelor monarch.

In Churchill, the King is believed to have a staunch and influential champion.

His pointed question to Baldwin in the Commons yesterday, when he asked for assurance that the prime minister would inform the House in advance of any "irrevocable step" was interpreted by informed observers as indicating Churchill wished to prevent Baldwin from demanding abdication without first announcing his intention to Edward himself.

Those who knew Churchill said he was at odds with Baldwin and a staunch admirer of both Edward and Mrs. Simpson.

Crowds Surround Palace.

As speculation and alarm spread throughout the empire after the crisis had precipitously broken over the dam of self-imposed newspaper censorship, crowds milled outside Buckingham Palace, hoping to catch a glimpse of their King.

Another champion of Edward's right to marry whoever he chose came forward in the Laborite, Col. Josiah Clement Wedgwood, who told the British Press Association:

"The King is beloved. The thing we have got to avoid more than anything el is abdication. Any change wil ltear this country in two. If a general election comes, the outcome will be on the side of the King."

The press, opening its columns to thorough discussion of the question for the first time, was divergently partisan.

Asked the Liberal afternoon Star: "Why should he (Edward) be denied the happiness of mankind?"

Wedgwood continued his statement with declaration that the coronation ceremony, scheduled for May, was merely a church service and concerned the British people at large only as it affected historic tradition.

Seeks Confidence Vote.

"The vast bulk of the people hate seeing a man bullied when he thinks he is right, and they respect a man who will stand up for his rights," Wedgwood said.

In Parliament, Wedgwood entered a motion for debate which was couched in puzzling phrases, but which was generally interpreted as tantamount to asking a vote of confidence in the King.

It read:

"That in the opinion of the House, the oath of allegiance which they l already taken to King Edward VIII is unaffected by any form of coronation ceremony, or by the presence thereat, or absence therefrom, of any dignitary or personage whatsoever; nor will they substitute any other for the King of England."

Parliamentarians said afterward they considered it unlik ly that the motion would be debated.

Reports and assumptions flew thick and fast throughout England as the day wore on.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, known to be equally as opposed to a marriage of Edward and Mrs. Simpson, was reported to have conferred with Baldwin; Edward was said to have sought the counsel of Lord Derby, one of the late King George's most intimate friends.

Labor leaders indicated they would meet soon to decide on which side they would throw their influence.

Around No. 10 Downing street, the residence of the prime minister, they jostled and craned far into the night.

Within, however, authorized spokesmen held their tongues in the face of almost incessant inquiries.

"Nothing has happened," was about all they would say.

Throughout the critical day, Mrs. Simpson herself stood by Edward's side, subjecting, her friends said, her views to his.

Some friends said she had been advised to leave England, but that the King would not allow her to do so, until his own future course is determined.

She will stay on in England for several months, they said, and has not considered going back to the United States in the face of the growing storm.

She is seriously worried, her friends said, lest her friendship for the King has impeded his own reign or has lost him the good will of the majority of his subjects.

For the second day the stock market felt the weight of the internal crisis, with all British government bonds dropping a quarter of a point. Traders refused to deal as most other markets remained stagnant.

A quick statement on the government's crisis was demanded by financial quarters, which expressed fear of eventualities if such were not forthcoming.

Labor Is Forum Topic.

"The Significance of the American Federation of Labor Convention" is the topic scheduled for discussion by the Capital City Forum this evening at 8 o'clock at 1502 Fourteenth street northwest. Speakers will include Dr. Boris Stern, Len De Caux and N. T. Alifas.

Royal Romance Stirs Far-Flung British Empire

Only Germany and Russia Keep People Ignorant of England's Crisis.

By the Associated Press.

Around a world wide-girdled by the broad British Empire there was one universal story today—the story of a King in love.

Only in Germany and Russia were the people kept ignorant of the dramatic battle of Edward of England to hold both his throne and the woman he loves.

Popular opinion in King Edward's empire rallied last night partly to the strong-willed monarch and partly to Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin in the Edward-Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson-Baldwin triangle.

"Mr. Baldwin is right. The King, as the King, must hold high the trust his revered father passed on to him."

The Cape Times, of Capetown, South Africa, editorially suggested the whole "constitutional issue" in the dispute in London should be laid before the public for discussion.

An unofficial canvass of ministers and Parliament members in Canberra, Australia, made it plain they would support the cabinet against the King.

Well-informed circles in London attached significance to India's reaction because the crown is the strongest link with the empire.

The Bombay Chronicle, favoring King Edward in the controversy, stated:

"The King is trying to render a distinct service to British democracy by proposing as its head to marry democratically, and our sympathies are entirely with him."

The press in Paris splashed on page one, with pictures, stories of the situation in London. Well-informed French sources stated they viewed the matter as an internal British problem.

The Rome press, breaking a complete silence, printed columns of news from London, but without editorial comment.

In Germany copies of the Muenchner Zeitung were confiscated after it had appeared with the headline "Constitutional Crisis in England—Severe Tension Between Throne and Cabinet."

Capital Among Mrs. Simpson's 'Home Towns'

The day may come—indeed seems almost here—when barkers on sightseeing buses will be pointing out places in Washington where Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson lived. This, in a sense, is one of her "home towns."

The elegant Baltimorean, who has won the heart of Britain's King Edward VIII, began coming here as a little girl in pigtails to visit her Aunt Bessie Merryman, of 1911 R street. Aunt Bessie is now in London, playing the role of chaperone in the greatest romance of modern times.

Later, in her debutante days, Wallis Warfield frequently came over here from Baltimore for parties, or for visits with Mrs. Merryman or Mrs. George Barnett, her mother's cousin.

She came here to live when her first husband, Lieut. (now Comdr.) E. Winfield Spencer, U. S. N., was ordered to Washington for duty. The marriage, contracted in the fall of 1916, was begining to crack up by this time, shortly after the World War.

A Social Favorite.

When Spencer was ordered from Washington to Shanghai, his young wife remained in Washington. Her mother then was living in Chevy Chase, Md., where she was hostess of the Chevy Chase Club. Washington was a lively place then, socially, and the always charming "Wally" was much in demand at parties, particularly those given by the diplomatic set.

She frequently appeared at luncheons given in the Hotel Hamilton by the "Soixante Gourmets"—a club made up of 60 of the younger and gayer diplomats.

Among Wally's close friends here in those days was Ethel Noyes, later to become the wife of Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Neilson, whose Connecticut avenue apartment she took over when they left for New York, and Mrs. Luke McNamee, wife of Capt. (later Rear Admiral) Luke McNamee. She shared an old home in Georgetown with Mrs. McNamee.

Wally eventually followed Lieut. Spencer to Shanghai, hoping to salvage their marriage. When both realized it was on the shoals, she returned here and then took up residence in Warrenton, Va., where she was to get her divorce. While the suit was pending, she spent much time in Washington.

Met Ernest Simpson.

While she was living in the Warren Green Hotel in Warrenton, the then Mrs. Spencer made a trip to New York to visit Mrs. Jacques Raffray, who, as Mary Kirk, had been one of her bridesmaids. It was a fateful trip. At a dinner in Mrs. Raffray's home, she met Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Simpson. Thereafter, the Simpsons were to be divorced. Simpson was to marry Wallis Warfield Spencer, and she in time was to divorce him after a world-shaking romance with King Edward VIII. Now, to top all this off, it is rumored Simpson is going to marry Mrs. Raffray.

The glamorous Baltimore woman had been married to Simpson a year or so when she received news that brought her hurrying from London to Washington. Her mother, twice a widow and then Mrs. Charles Gordon Allen, was seriously ill. When Wally arrived, her mother was unconscious, dying. The end came a week later.

Back in London, Mrs. Simpson remained in mourning for a long period before she started on the social career that was to land her in the heart of a bachelor King and on the first pages of the world's newspapers.

Mrs. Vanderbilt in Court As Counsel Argue Case

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt sat in the chambers of Supreme Court Justice Timothy A. Leary for an hour today while her counsel and attorneys of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney renewed the fight over the custody of Mrs. Vanderbilt's 13-year-old daughter, Gloria.

The outcome of the conference was adjournment of the hearings until next Wednesday, when Mrs. Whitney, the child's aunt, will be called on to show why Mrs. Vanderbilt should not be awarded full or more continuous custody of her daughter. Mrs. Whitney was awarded custody of Gloria two years ago by Justice John F. Carew, who stipulated that the child could visit her mother on weekends, and during July and August and on Christmas.

Pa. Bloc Gives Rayburn Lead In Floor Race

Yorker implied that the Pennsylvania maneuver was "for publication only"; that the unit rule is ineffective in secret balloting, and the reaction to the caucus, when it was known that Guffey was present, would be decidedly unfavorable, implying that the Senate was managing House affairs.

Guffey, who gave the caucusers a luncheon and then remained in the room throughout the meeting (or at least didn't come out until it was over), insisted that he knew nothing of the Representatives' deliberations—that he was not present—and that he had no hand in the debate.

One reporter suggested that possibly Senator Guffey had remained in the room's bathroom the entire three hours. Representative J. Burrwood Daly, one of the Representatives in the meeting, asked for the results, said:

"Ask Joe Guffey. He's the big cheese here."

O'Connor, brushing back his long, red hair, said he had "expected this. * * * This is the big break Sam Rayburn's been talking about. * * * It was very nice of Joe Guffey not to take part in it."

Rayburn, dressed symphonically in a chocolate-brown suit and tie, carefully selected a cigar which matched his ensemble in shade, and told reporters:

"I'm more than gratified at the action of the Pennsylvania delegation. It will mean a lot in the final wind-up of this thing. * * * I've been sitting pretty tight for the last few hours."

Asked if he had been in consultation with Guffey before the caucus, he said he had not and asked Representative Fred Vinson, of Kentucky, present in the office, if he had. Vinson admitted he had consulted with Guffey in the matter. Asked if Vice President John Nance Garner were present at the Pennsylvania session, Rayburn laughed, saying:

"He may have been there in spirit, if not in body."

Another Congressman present cracked back:

"Guffey was there in body, but not in spirit."

Garner indorsed Rayburn wholeheartedly the other day, an unprecedented action, and one which many observers held to be the most indicative straw in the wind, because of Garner's known perspicacity. Rayburn estimated last night that he could "reasonably expect more than enough votes to win." Several days ago he figured that his total was 181, or 13 more votes than required.

tion and carry it to The Post Building.

Ray Bell, of Loew's Washington theaters, announced collection boxes for the fund will be placed in the lobbies of the Capitol, the Palace and the Columbia theaters. Bell also announced Carter Barron, manager of Loew's, is arranging a special program for children to be presented on a Saturday morning between now and Christmas. Admission to this special show, which will present a full hour and a half of stage and screen entertainment especially selected for children, will be a new toy or doll. Full details, together with names of the screen features to be shown and the stage and radio stars who will be seen, will be announced later.

Peoples Drug Stores volunteered to place toy and doll fund collection boxes in each of the 42 Peoples stores located throughout the city. This work will be under the direction of Dr. J. W. Pollard and A. L. Merrill, of the Peoples' organization.

Arch McDonald, WJSV sports commentator, and Arthur Godfrey, of WJSV's morning "Sun Dial" program, will lend their services over the air in spreading the word of the Toy and Doll Fund to their morning and evening listeners.

Every effort is being made to make this year's fund the most successful in the entire history of the project, which, for many Christmases, has attempted to make certain that every Washington boy and girl received some gift at Yuletide.

A steady stream of toys, both old and new, continued to flow into The Post's Christmas storeroom yesterday. Now, with the added cooperation of Loew's theaters, People Drug Stores, WJSV and the Terminal Taxicabs, the number of gifts should increase materially.

You may bring your contribution to The Washington Post Building, to anyone of the three Loew's theaters, to anyone of the 42 People's Drug Stores, if, for any reason, you cannot bring your gift to any of these collection points, call a Terminal cab. All cash contributions should be sent directly to The Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest, or deposit in the collection box of the Toy and Doll Fund at the counter on the first floor of The Post Building.

Curran Outlines Police Court Work

Functions of District Police Court and its importance to Washington's crime-control problem were outlined yesterday by Judge Edward M. Curran, newest Police Court jurist, in an address before the corrections committee of the Council of Social Agencies.

Speaking at the Harrington Hotel, Judge Curran described crime as a manifestation of economic movement. "I am confident," he said, "that widespread lawlessness is a symptom of widespread paganism. In performing the task that lies before us it might be well to consider the words of that humanitarian, Marcus Aurelius, when he said, 'Think of this doctrine * * * that reasoning beings were created for one another's sake; that to be patient is a branch of justice, and that men sin without intending to.'"

The council committee adopted several resolutions offered by its sub-committee on institutions and prisons, calling for improvements and changes in Washington's penal institutions—the jail, Lorton Reformatory and Occoquan.

Two Schools Completed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 3.—Two new Washington County school buildings at Sharpsburg and Maugansville were completed this week at a cost of approximately $100,000, but will not be occupied until after the Christmas holiday, Superintendent Byron J. Grimes, of the board of education, announced.

$500,000 Sought For U. S. Inquiries

By the Associated Press.

Congressional investigators disclosed yesterday they would ask the new Congress for at least $500,000 to complete inquiries into three phases of the Nation's finance and industry.

Their requests will include:

1. An additional $350,000 to finance the Federal Communications Commission's study of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., undertaken at the direction of Congress.
2. An estimated $100,000 to continue a Senate investigation of railway financing.
3. An unspecified sum—tentatively set at $200,000—to wind up the Senate's inquiry into strike breaking, labor espionage and other civil liberties violations.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, and others back of the inquiries were prepared to argue that the $1,215,000 already spent on the three investigations has proved "a highly profitable investment."

Beer Permit Threatened.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 3.—Arnold Ingram, Dargen, Washington County, has been cited to appear before the county license board December 12 to show cause why his on-sale beer license should not be revoked as a result of a disorder last Saturday which culminated in an attack upon Deputy Sheriff Edward Brandt.

China Demands Japan Remove Troops at Once

'Satisfaction' for Landing of Marines Asked in Virtual Ultimatum.

Nanking, Dec. 3 (AP).—In a virtual ultimatum to Japan, Gen. Chang Chun, Chinese foreign minister, tonight demanded "immediate satisfaction" for the reported landing of 1,000 Japanese marines in the Chinese city of Tsingtao.

Gen. Chang Chun summoned Shigeru Kawagoe, the Japanese Ambassador, to the foreign office and presented three demands:

1. Immediate withdrawal of Japanese troops at Tsingtao.
2. Return of Chinese documents allegedly seized by Japanese bluejackets in a raid on Chinese government offices.
3. Release of Chinese officials assertedly arrested by Japanese at Tsingtao.

Marines Landed.

Tokyo (Friday) Dec. 4 (AP).—An official navy office communique stated today that a "serious Chinese labor situation" in Japanese mills at Tsingtao necessitated the landing of Japanese marines to maintain peace and order.

The communique asserted the commander of the Third Japanese Squadron warned the mayor of Tsingtao about an outbreak of strikes and "sabotage" among the Chinese employes of nine Japanese-operated cotton mills, but without result.

"So aggravated did the situation become," declared the navy office, "the Japanese mills had to be closed on Wednesday. As the situation threatened to become further aggravated, even resulting in rioting, a landing party was sent ashore to protect the lives and property of Japaneses nationals and their other rights and interests.

"At the same time Chinese authorities were requested to take positive measures to suppress the unrest."

dustrial Organization" by Vice President F. J. Gorman of the United Textile Workers of America. The agreement provided collective bargaining and a 12½ per cent wage boost.

Ship Lines Signed.

The Lykes Steamship interests agreed to a new contract with two striking seamen's unions at Houston, Tex. Pay increases ranging from $15 to $20 a month were included.

At New York, officials of the French Line announced last night the liner Champlain would sail at midnight, 12 hours behind schedule, returning 525 tons of cargo which American longshoremen refused to remove from the vessel.

Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's Union, who has opposed the seamen's strike Wednesday permitted his men to unload only baggage, mail and 75 tons of perishable freight. His refusal to unload the remainder of the cargo was in reprisal for the French dock workers' refusal to unload American-owned ships in sympathy with American striking seamen.

C. I. O. Aims at Rayon Union.

By the United Press.

Committee for Industrial Organization, headed by John L. Lewis, last night expanded its unionization drive by aiming an organizing campaign at the rayon industry of the South. Francis J. Gorman, vice president of the United Textile Workers, C. I. O. affiliate, announced the union would meet here next week "to map out the next steps in our campaign to organize this industry."

Foreign Trade Seen Best Since 1930

By the Associated Press.

Commerce Department reports forecast yesterday that America's foreign trade will be the greatest since 1930.

On the basis of statistics for the first ten months of the year, plus indicated trade for the last two months, officials said the Nation would have aggregate dealings abroad of $4,910,000,000, counting both sales and purchases. This would be an increase of $581,000,000 over 1935.

The year's so-called "favorable trade balance," which was estimated at $130,000,000, would fall substantially below that of 1935, however, when exports exceeded imports by $235,000,000.

The Administration's foreign trade policies have not been aimed at creating heavy export balances, Secretary Roper explained recently that their chief purpose was to step up the flow of trade both to and from this country.

Sarraut Terms Reich-Nazi Pact A Peace Menace

Charges Secret Clauses in Treaty, Asserts Interests of U. S. Imperiled.

By the United Press.

Paris, Dec. 3.—Former Premier Albert Sarraut said tonight the new German-Japanese treaty contains secret clauses which are a "menace to peace."

"I am strenuously opposed to a wall of certain countries which are trying to obtain territorial conquests through intimidation and force," the Radical-Socialist leader said.

"The German-Japanese treaty, as published, does not tell the whole truth. It surely includes secret clauses stipulating co-operation by the two powers for respective joint action to accomplish their aims."

The former premier, one of the dozen statesmen usually consulted on questions of high politics, said the Nazi-Japanese pact, although nominally aimed at communism, actually menaces interests of the United States, Great Britain and France.

He explained he understood Japan's vital needs, but hoped an international economic conference would give her satisfaction.

The Communist peril, he alleged, merely was a pretext used by Germany and Japan to cover their imperialistic aims in conclusion of a treaty.

Pact Cheered in Japan.

Tokyo, Dec. 3 (AP).—Japanese Rightists throughout the nation tonight celebrated conclusion of the German-Japanese agreement, their enthusiasm undimmed by Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita's statement that Japan has not joined any Fascist bloc of nations.

Foreign Minister Arita deprecated interpretations of the Japanese-German anti-communist accord as meaning Japan had joined in the European "Fascist bloc," declaring: "If the agreement were confined to Japan and Germany alone, there might be some basis for such an allegation, but an invitation to join was extended to any and all powers, including democratic America and Great Britain."

U. S. Not Approached.

By the Associated Press.

Responsible sources indicated yesterday this government had not been approached by any nation to join in the Japanese German pact directed against the spread of communism.

Disbarred Attorney Sues U.S. Justices

Edmond C. Fletcher, a disbarred attorney, yesterday in District Court filed a $1,000,000 damage suit against 17 persons who he charged with responsibility for his disbarment. Among those named as defendants were the entire bench of the United States Court of Claims [illegible] Chief Justice A. A. Wheat and Associate Justice Jesse C. Adkins, of the United States District Court.

Acting as his own attorney Fletcher charged the defendants and "wickedly conspired to blast to oblivion all his prospects for professional fame and eminence."

Those named as defendants were Chief Justice Fenton W. Booth and Associate Justices Thomas S. Williams, Richard S. Whaley, William R. Green and Benjamin H. Littleton, all of the Court of Claims; William L. Hart and Fred C. Kleinschmidt, clerks of that court; Bolitha J. Laws, G. Bowdoin Craighill and Frank H. Myers, members of the grievance committee of the bar; J. Harry Covington, John F. McCarron and Jesse I. Miller, who presented the complaint against Fletcher; Charles B. Coftin, a District Court clerk, and Edward K. Campbell and Chief Justice Wheat and Justice Adkins.

Salary Restored.

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 3 (AP).—The State of Connecticut restored today all of the 8 to 16 per cent salary cuts taken from 6,000 of its employes in 1933. The restoration was made by the State Board of Finance and control, which last January returned half of the wage reductions.

A group of British members of Parliament, visiting Madrid for first hand investigations of the civil war, cabled their House of Commons today asking gas masks for citizens of Madrid.

Dr. Fralhkel, of the international column of anti-Fascists fighting in defense of the city, reported to them that 10 cases of apparent gas poisonings were under observation.

The M. P.'s left for Valencia to talk with Spanish Foreign Minister Julio Alvarez del Vayo after which they planned to go to Paris to see France's Socialist Premier Leon Blum.

Protests Planned.

(In Valencia, Spanish government leaders said today foreign reports of Germans having landed in Cadiz and other Spanish Fascist ports would probably be used as protests to the special League of Nations Council session scheduled for December 10 on the Spanish Civil War.)

(In Barcelona, it was officially announced that Catalan President Luis Companys would leave for Paris Friday to attend a rally Sunday. It was said he would probably make the trip in an automobile, accompanied by representatives of the most powerful labor organizations represented in Spain's elected "Popular Front" government.)

Spanish Ships Seized.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Attaches of the Spanish consulate general today announced the confiscation of the Spanish freighter, the S. S. Navemar, at her anchorage off Fifty-third street, Brooklyn.

The action was taken, it was said, by order of the Spanish government at Madrid. No explanation was offered for the confiscation and officials of the ship's agents, Garcia & Diaz, said they were uninformed.

Einstein Discovers Star Space Magnifies Like Telescope Lens

Rays Passing Near Sun Bend, Then Collect to Give Focus; Distant Bodies Will Be Brought Nearer With Improved Camera.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Prof. Albert Einstein today gave the world another mathematical discovery, a celestial wonder new to astronomy, showing that the space near a star is a magnifying glass.

It means that one star, with improved astronomical instruments, can be a magnifying glass, or telescope, for better seeing another, more distant star. The reason, he explains, is the bending of light rays when they pass near the sun or any other massive star.

The rays, he finds, collect in this space as they would in a lens. Then at certain distant points the rays so collected are focused, like the focus of a spy glass, opera glass or telescope.

Human eyes, at the right point in space, would see this star-focused image. There are stars suitably lined up, one far behind the other, to be seen in this manner from earth. But Prof. Einstein points out that present optical equipment and present resolving power of telescopes is not sufficient to make these space images visible.

He announces the "lens" effect, in Science, official journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The star magnifying glasses go back to the world-famous eclipse of the sun in 1919 which was the first verification of Einstein's general theory of relativity.

Stars whose light passed close to the sun during eclipse were photographed. Six months later, when again in the same position, but with the sun no longer near them, they were rephotographed on the same plates.

The star rays did not fall on the same places in the photographic plates, showing that the rays had been deflected, inward toward the sun, when they passed close to it during the eclipse.

This verified Einstein's prediction. Newton long before had shown that the sun's gravitation would be enough to bend the rays of light. But Einstein's relativity gave a greater bending, attributed to a curved electro-magnetic space near the sun. This extra bend the eclipse verified.

Mgr. Cantwell Is Enthroned As Archbishop

Legion of Decency Inspirer Heads New Los Angeles Metropolitan See.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Dec. 3.—The Most Rev. John Joseph Cantwell—"inspirer" of the Legion of Decency—became the Nation's sixteenth archbishop of the Catholic Church today, climaxing a three-hour ceremony which elevated Los Angeles to a metropolitan see of the faith.

During the solemn church ceremonies, participated in by more than 1,000 Catholic representatives, Archbishop John T. McNicholas, of Cincinnati, said the new archbishop's "soul-stirring appeal," made to brother bishops in Washington "resulted in the founding of the Legion of Decency by the bishops of the United States."

Today's ceremony at St. Vibiana's Cathedral began with a long procession witnessed by thousands, who were unable to get into the church. There were acolytes, seminarians, secular priests, members of the religious clergy, including Friars Minor, Claretians, Dominicans, Benedictines, Canons Regular of the Immaculate Conception, seven archbishops and 50 bishops in attendance.

The papal seals for the enthronization of the archbishop and for the inauguration of the diocese as a metropolitan see were read, first in Latin and then in English, by Mgr. John J. Cawley, vicar general of the archdiocese. Both were dated last August 12, when Pope Pius XI gave permission to establish the new ecclesiastical province.

The formality of presenting the throne to Archbishop Cantwell was a ceremony performed by His Excellency, Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States.

Albert Fall Ranch Litigation Settled

El Paso, Texas, Dec. 3 (AP).—Broken, aging Albert B. Fall was legally free tonight to return to his beautiful ranch home in Southern New Mexico.

But he may never go home.

The former Secretary of Interior is in a hospital here—too ill to comment when his attorney announced a settlement had ended years of litigation over the ranch.

Friends recalled how indignantly he once spurned an offer to live indefinitely "as guest" in the home he had known as his own. The offer was made by the Petroleum Securities Corporation which foreclosed a mortgage and instituted suit to evict Fall. The corporation won in District Court and Fall's appeal was pending in New Mexico Supreme Court when the settlement was announced.

Proposed Bus Route Inspection Tour Set

An automobile tour of several proposed routes for the Takoma Park bus line will be taken by members of the Public Utilities Commission before reaching a decision on the petition to substitute buses for street cars, Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman, said yesterday.

A dual route has been suggested by a citizens' joint committee, the Capital Transit Co. has proposed another route, while the Ninth street business men have asked that the buses be routed along Ninth instead of Thirteenth street.

Prison Lifer Turns Human Mole To Hide Month From Guards

Convict Hid Underground and in Crevices During Freedom Period; Escaped During Football Game at Penitentiary.

Fort Madison, Iowa, Dec. 3 (AP).—H. M. Evans, 46-year-old "human mole," started a stretch of solitary confinement at the State Penitentiary today, but it was a comparative luxury for the man who for more than a month hid in a crevice less than 2 feet high under one of the prison buildings.

He "escaped" into the underground hideout October 25 during a prison football game.

"I had a chocolate bar, some cheese, a loaf of bread and a jug of water which I bought at the canteen," Evans said. "When that was gone I started slipping out at night. A couple of lungers (tuberculosis patients) gave me what food they could get. I was in for life so I had nothing to lose.

"I had a golf ball rigged up with a string which I tried to toss over an upright on one end of the cell houses. If I could have done it I'd have pulled up a rope I'd made and got over the wall.

"But I tried it night after night and I couldn't get the ball to come down right or else the string would get caught. I finally gave it up and figured to just lay low and wait for a break.

"I could have stayed in there till Hell froze over if somebody hadn't turned stool pigeon on me," said the Turin, Iowa, bank robber.

Strip-Tease Artiste Beaux Arts Highlight

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Two thousand citizens who will spend from $10 to $300 a head to go to "Heaven" for one night ransacked attics tonight for the costume proper to admit them to the Beaux Arts ball, annually Manhattan's wildest party.

The party, backed by New York's "400," begins at midnight tomorrow night and ends when the citizens come back to earth. Its motif is "the Court of the Heavens." Its site is in a Times Square hotel, where once it was on Park avenue. Its main attraction this year is Gypsy Rose Lee, Broadway's strip-tease artiste supreme.

Brick Concern Raided By Racket Prosecutor

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Police of the staff of Thomas E. Dewey, special rackets prosecutor, raided all offices of the Ace Brick Corporation and 23 affiliated companies today in what Dewey called an attempt to smash a $3,000,000 a year racket.

The corporation is in the business of hauling away old bricks from demolished buildings and reselling them to contractors. All company books and records were seized and the firm's officers were called in for questioning.

Filipino Rescuers Seek Storm Dead

Manila, Dec. 3 (AP).—Typhoon-shattered communication lines hampered rescue workers tonight in the wake of a violent storm which whipped across the Philippines yesterday, leaving at least one person dead and 32 missing.

Relief crews feared the toll would be much heavier in remote provinces. Among the missing were 20 gold miners believed to have been entombed by landslides in Nueva Ecija Province, north of Manila. The slides were attributed to terrific rains which accompanied the storm.

Twelve other men were listed as missing after their fishing vessel failed to put in at Bataan Province, across the bay.

Sunken Wreck Found.

Cleveland, Dec. 3 (AP).—Maj. W. D. Luplow of the U. S. Engineer's Office said today a sunken wreck, which may be the Canadian ship Sand Merchant, has been located about eight miles off Avon, Ohio. The Sand Merchant went down in an October gale with a loss of 19 lives. A diver will attempt to make positive identification.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

A cough, chest cold or bronchial irritation today may lead to serious trouble tomorrow. You can relieve them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified Creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery that aids nature to soothe and heal the infected membranes and to relieve the irritation and inflammation as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.

Medical authorities have for many years recognized the wonderful effects of Beechwood Creosote for treating coughs, chest colds and bronchial irritations. A chemist worked out a special process of blending Creosote with other ingredients so that now in Creomulsion you get a real dose of Beechwood Creosote which is palatable and can even be taken frequently and continuously by adults and children. Thousands of doctors now use Creomulsion in their own families and practice, and druggists rank Creomulsion top because in this genuine, original product you can get a real dose of Creosote so emulsified that it goes to the very seat of the trouble to help loosen and expel germ-laden phlegm.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles, especially those that start with a common cold and hang on and on. Get a bottle of Creomulsion right now from your druggist, use it all up as directed and if you fail to get satisfactory relief, he is authorized to refund every cent of your money. Americas Get Plan to Repel Foreign Foes

Joint Action Proposed at Peace Parley; Follows Roosevelt's Ideas.

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Dec. 3.—A project for joint American action against any outside aggression—suggested by President Roosevelt—was laid before the Inter-American Peace Conference tonight as it began actual work.

Manuel Castro Ramirez, a Salvadorean delegate, said he presented the proposal in collaboration with four other Central American delegations—Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

The measure, described as "a treaty of inter-American solidarity and co-operation," provides that "any extracontinental aggression against any American nation should provoke uniform and joint action."

Urged by Roosevelt.

President Roosevelt, in his address at the first session of the conference Tuesday, pictured American countries standing "shoulder to shoulder" to resist any foreign attack.

The Central American project must be approved by divisional committees and then the steering committee, which got down to work today, before getting to the floor of the parley at a full session.

Carlos Saavedra Lamas, Argentine foreign minister and winner of the Nobel peace prize this year, was unanimously elected head of the steering committee after his nomination by the head of the United States delegation, Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

Meetings to Be Public.

The committee, which includes leaders of all the 21 delegations, decided to make all committee meetings and full conference sessions open as a general rule, following a practice of the 1933 regular Pan-American conference at Montevideo.

Divisional committees and the steering group will be permitted to declare closed sessions, however, if they desire secrecy.

Delegates from countries which are members of the League of Nations declined to comment immediately on the Central American plan for a united stand against foreign aggression, asserting they wished to determine first how it might affect their league commitments.

Solidarity Stressed.

Castro Ramirez declared the move marked "the first time in the history of Pan-American conferences that Central American representatives have been united to defend the same points of view."

To line up the conference program and get it moving toward the principal objective — establishment of permanent peace in the Western Hemisphere—a committee was named to decide the preference for subjects on the already prepared agenda. The United States, Argentina, Colombia, Peru and Guatemala were chosen members of the committee.

47-Year 'Dry' Period Ends in North Dakota

Bismarck, N. Dak., Dec. 3. (AP).—Liquor was sold legally in North Dakota late today for the first time in the 47-year history of the State.

First sales took place in Minot, where State tax stamps were rushed immediately after the attorney general's office ruled stamps could be distributed and liquor sold despite a challenge of the constitutionality of the law approved by voters at the November election.

Text of Roosevelt Response

By the Associated Press.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Dec. 3.—The text of President Roosevelt's response to the speech of welcome by President Terra of Uruguay follows:

Your Excellency President Terra, and Senora de Terra, it is a privilege today to be the guest of the government of the Republic of Uruguay and it is a great personal pleasure to which I have looked forward for many years.

Here three years ago in this beautiful city of Montevideo there was born a new era of friendship and confidence among the Americas. No one is entitled to more credit for this new day than your Excellency; for you labored unceasingly and generously both as host and as statesman for the success of that conference.

I believe that when history comes to be written the origin of the new American era will be placed here in the memorable year 1933. Truly, it is an inspiration for the average citizen of all our republics that that conference is giving back its fruits in terms of achievement for the people of the world. During the past week I have become certain of this because I have seen in the faces of the men, women and children in Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires and, today, in Montevideo a joyful expression of hope and faith which can and will inspire us, their chosen representatives, to even greater activity in the common cause.

Spirit of Applied Justice.

You, Mr. President, have used a term in speaking of that great patriot, Gen. Artigas, which can well be the inspiration of us all. You have spoken of his "serene and noble spirit of applied justice." It is because of this spirit which actuated the founding fathers of the American republics that we their followers are inspired to maintain the democratic principles for which they fought.

I am particularly grateful for the kind words which you, Mr. President, have spoken concerning our policies in the United States of America. We fully join with you in the thought that the first battlefield of peace is that of securing well-being at home. It has been of special interest to me to know that you in the Republic of Uruguay have made such great advances in behalf of the well-being of your citizens.

In the days of Gen. Artigas and of his friend, President Monroe, human society had, of course, little conception of the economic and social problems which we face today. None of the fathers of any of our republics had even heard of an eight-hour day, of minimum wages, of protection for women and children, of collective bargaining between employers and employes, of old age security, of modern sanitation, of concrete highways, of railroads or steel buildings. The fathers had not thought of the telegraph, the radio, the automobile, or of travel by fast steamships and by air. They knew little of the problems of modern science, of modern finance.

Would Approve Acts.

And yet, you and I are very certain that if they were alive today the founders of our governments would look with approval on what we are seeking to do to use the processes of democratic government in solving the new problems.

I recognize as you do that these new problems are common to all our nations. I am glad that you have said that we have been compelled to abandon the comfortable attitude of statesmen of the old school. Every nation in all the world has been compelled to recognize the fact of new conditions. It is of the utmost importance that the nations of the new world have found it possible under vigorous leadership to find the answer within the spirit and the framework of constitutional government and democratic processes.

We have not completed our task. In accordance with the objectives and theory of democratic government, that task is a continuing one. We seek new remedies for new conditions; new conditions will continue to arise; sometimes the remedies succeed, and sometimes they must be altered or improved. But the net result is that we move forward. We learn, and ought to learn, much from each other—much that is good and some things which, from experience, we must avoid.

In the case of agriculture, for example, you are familiar with the fact that in the United States we did many things in the past which ran counter to the laws of nature and of sensible economics. In many parts of my country we have used the land in such a way as to diminish its productiveness, we have harmed our supply of water and we have lost our top soil. Today our government seeks to work with our farming population in correcting these mistakes and in bringing back a greater prosperity and a more permanent use of the land. I cite this as an example, which you undoubtedly know of, to show the need among all our republics of keeping in close touch with each other, for many of our problems are similar.

Quicker Travel Needed.

On this delightful visit to Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay I have been impressed with the immediate need for better and quicker services of travel and communication between North and South America. I look forward to the day when instead of its being a long and unusual journey, visits between the nations of South America and those of Central America and of North America will be so simple that tens of thousands of our citizens will meet each other in friendly intercourse every year.

And, may I add, that I hope that we shall have a much greater familiarity with each others' languages. It is a great regret of my life that while with some difficulty I can read a little Spanish, I cannot yet converse in it. These visits which I am making on this voyage are so enjoyable in every way that I look forward to an opportunity to return in the future. When that day comes I hope that I shall be able to speak with all of you in your native tongue.

And may I also express the hope that it will be possible for you, Mr. President and Senora de Terra, to be the guest of Mrs. Roosevelt and myself in Washington while we are still in the White House. Nothing would give us and the people of the United States more pleasure.

It has touched me deeply that you have proposed a toast to Mrs. Roosevelt. She was deeply disappointed that she could not come with me and she will be happy to know of your courtesy and of your thought of her.

I lift my glass to the good health and happiness of you and Senora de Terra, and to the continued prosperity, happiness and progress of the people of the Republic of Uruguay.

Lest We Forget.

In view of prevalent optimism concerning the outlook for a balanced budget, it is well to be reminded of the size of the prospective deficit for the current fiscal year. Secretary Morgenthau has indicated that additional appropriations for relief purposes will probably amount to $500,000,000. Adding that sum to the estimated deficit of $2,097,000,000 forecast by the President in September, a total deficit of over $2,500,000,000 is now anticipated for the current fiscal year.

This is a huge sum, although somewhat less formidable than it appears at first glance. As the President has pointed out, $580,000,000 of the gross deficit is accounted for by debt retirement and $560,000,000 represents veterans' bonus outlays. Furthermore, the increase in the public debt will be well below the actual deficiency in current receipts, since it is planned to draw upon the large cash balances of the Treasury to the extent of approximately $1,100,000,000.

Consequently, if President Roosevelt's September estimates can be relied upon, and if new relief appropriations are limited to $500,000,000, the volume of net borrowing this fiscal year will bring total indebtedness up to $34,700,000,000 by the end of next June. Those who look upon the bright side of the budget picture will concentrate on indications that the rise in public debt can now be held in check. Those who take a gloomy view of the fiscal situation will point out that the Treasury anticipated its needs for the current fiscal year and then helped itself liberally to cash resulting from premature borrowing operations.

Viewed dispassionately, the outlook is certainly not as roseate as some Administration spokesmen would have the public believe. On the other hand, it may be reasonably encouraging, if Congress is resolute in pruning expenses next year and in avoiding new forms of extravagance. Unfortunately, so much has been said about the additions to revenue expected as a result of business improvement that Congress may not be sufficiently impressed with the need for reduction in current outlays.

To dissipate the illusion that budgetary balance can be painlessly achieved without imposing new taxes or cutting down expenses, it is only necessary to mention a few pertinent facts. The deficit for the present fiscal year, exclusive of all bonus payments and all allowances for debt retirement, will probably amount to $1,500,000,000. This figure assumes that current revenues from taxes will total about $5,700,000,000. In turn this indicates that revenue receipts would have to exceed the unprecedented figure of $7,000,000,000 per annum to effect a balancing of the budget without retrenchment and without the aid of new taxes.

Only a super-optimist anticipates a business expansion that would bring such colossal tax revenues into the Treasury during the coming fiscal year.

A Competent Board.

In removing the high school weekly, Scholastic, from the "required" and "approved" reading lists of the schools, the Board of Education had no thought of the "red rider." Yet the board's action provides another excellent argument for the complete elimination of that obnoxious legislation.

It was not mention of communism or description of any other political philosophy which prompted the board in this decision, but rather the ardent pacificism of the editors of Scholastic who seemingly have not hesitated to use the magazine's columns for the dissemination of their viewpoint on this issue. There is no place for propaganda, regardless of its intrinsic merits or demerits, in the schools. As Superintendent of Schools Ballou has put it, "No magazine used in the schools should be anything other than one that gives factual information."

In concurring with this sentiment, the Board of Education demonstrates its high sense of civic responsibility. The board is charged with the enlightened supervision of Washington's public schools. That it needs no internal mandate in handling this assignment is indicated by the careful consideration which preceded disapproval of Scholastic as recommended reading for children. Another argument, if it were needed, has been brought forward for the repeal of the "red rider" as soon as Congress convenes.

A Regimented King.

The cloud which was no larger than a man's hand has spread until it overshadows the empire on which the sun never sets. The Simpson affair has burst all the restraints with which the British press for months has sought to hedge it and the issue now, quite coldly and calmly, is whether or not Edward VIII shall be allowed to keep his throne.

That issue will not be understood by Americans, accustomed to exaggerate the value of the royal prerogative, unless there is appreciation of the extent to which the English regard their monarch as a convenient symbol, and nothing more. As far back as 1872, when there was probably less republicanism in Great Britain than there is communism there today, Walter Bagehot described the occupant of the throne as "a useful public functionary who may be changed and in whose place you may make another." The writings of this famous commentator on the English Constitution have been studied by every educated Englishman and to them, certainly, no divinity hedges Edward VIII. He is not King by the grace of God, but purely by the tolerance of those who are willing to call themselves his subjects.

The real virtue of a King in the English political system, Bagehot went on to say, is that he gives "a vast strength to the entire constitution by enlisting on its behalf the credulous obedience of enormous masses." And to fulfill this function "it should be evident that he (the King) does no wrong. He should not be brought too closely to real measurement. He should be aloof and solitary. As the functions of English royalty are for the most part latent, it fulfills this condition. It seems to order but it never seems to struggle. It is commonly hidden, like a mystery, and sometimes paraded, like a pageant, but in neither case is it contentious . . . The crown . . . is a visible symbol of unity to those still so imperfectly educated as to need a symbol."

Against this traditional conception of his office, Edward VIII has set his face. He has never been "aloof and solitary." He has never sought to encourage "the credulous obedience of enormous masses." His warm and vivid and often uncalculating personality have brought him all too close to that "real measurement" which Bagehot said must be avoided to preserve his office. The very qualities which prove him to be so human are serious detriments to his value as the nominal sovereign.

It is not merely because the object of his affections is an American that there will be deep sympathy for Edward VIII in the predicament in which he finds himself. There is something rather inhuman, against which warm blood revolts, in the skillful way in which the English have reduced their monarch to a useful puppet, "commonly hidden and sometimes paraded" in order to enlist "credulous obedience" from the masses. His revolt, particularly on so personal an issue as that of marriage, is at bottom nothing more than the revolt of the individual against absolute domination by the all-powerful State. And as such it appeals to the love of freedom which runs in Anglo-Saxon blood, making poor Edward a royal symbol of the way in which man may be crushed by the regimentation of modern society.

But there is little likelihood that the King will win out in this dramatic struggle. When opposed by a united Parliament no English King has ever won, and the fact that the lady in question is a foreigner, a commoner and a divorcee creates an opposition to his contemplated marriage which no fortitude on his part is likely successfully to overcome. The human qualities which make the romance so intriguing are, paradoxically, the very qualities which make its happy outcome impossible. Unlike his father, Edward VIII has forgotten that from the constitutional viewpoint he has been reduced to a symbol. And when his symbolic values are discarded the King means little or nothing to the hard-headed men who run the British Empire.

The British tradition is to compromise. It goes without saying that everything possible will be done to prevent an abdication, or to make that step as easy as possible if no alternative can be found. But unless public opinion is far more strongly behind him than seems to be the case, the King will never have his way and remain King. He will learn, poor man, that his people have been deferential to him only on the assumption that he would always be deferential to them.

A Small Claims Court.

Disputes between landlords and tenants are a constant source of friction in Washington. For the thousands of families forced to live in sub-standard quarters the importance of establishing a tribunal to arbitrate petty differences in this field can scarcely be overemphasized. As James Ring, of the Alley Dwelling Authority, pointed out to the Washington Committee on Housing recently, the creation of such machinery is really an integral part of the housing problem.

It is no reply to this demand for informal adjustment of minor disputes to say that all cases can be carried to the courts. Many citizens suffer injustice for the simple reason that they can not afford to seek legal redress for their grievances. That is especially true in cases involving the landlord-tenant relationship. The list of civic-minded citizens who urge the importance of arbitration facilities there is itself sufficient to prove the need for a new line of approach.

The settlement of disputes over rentals and housing conditions, however, is only part of a larger problem. Much of the discussion within the Committee on Housing revolved around the creation of renters' courts. It is not practical to establish special courts for each class of cases. When the question of protecting the rights of the underprivileged is considered in all its aspects, landlord-tenant differences are found to be similar to many other disputes that do not reach the regular courts because of excessive costs.

The Committee on Housing would do well, therefore, to give its full support to Judge Nathan Cayton's plan for establishment of a small claims court for the adjustment of controversies involving less than $50. That plan has already been indorsed in principle by the Committee on Housing and various other civic groups. If judges of the Municipal Court decide that it can be put into operation without enactment of a new law, this plan should quickly go a long way toward solution of the small claims problem as a whole.

Looking Before Leaping.

Government attorneys assigned to study Senator O'Mahoney's Federal incorporation bill are reported to fear that it could not withstand a test of constitutionality in the Supreme Court. If their reasoning is accepted by the President, it may have a vital effect upon the course of his second Administration. For the O'Mahoney bill is at present the leading measure advanced to re-establish the principles of the NRA without demanding a constitutional amendment.

The technique which seems to have been followed in this case is no less significant than the conclusion which the experts are reported to have reached. During the first three years of the New Deal bills of the most momentous character were enacted with scarcely a thought as to their constitutionality. Under our system of government, with its carefully balanced and divided powers, such procedure inevitably invited wholesale invalidation of statutes.

Even after the NRA had been upset by a unanimous court, the President asked Congress to let no doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, prevent the enactment of the Guffey coal bill. That attitude foreshadowed nullification of the subsequent act as well as numerous others passed on the assumption that the depression period justified stretching the organic law out of all recognition.

If Administration measures of the last four years had been subjected to the same careful advance scrutiny which Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission attorneys have given the O'Mahoney bill, the New Deal's reverses in the courts would certainly have been less numerous. It is not always possible, of course, for the Attorney General to foresee what a Supreme Court decision will be. But if that official were definitely charged with the responsibility of keeping Administration measures within the limits of Federal power, much wasted effort might be avoided.

Reports of executive uncertainty regarding the O'Mahoney bill suggest, at any rate, that the Administration is through with the practice of pressing doubtful measures with its fingers crossed. There is no indication that the Supreme Court would consider only superficial aspects of this legislation and ignore the compulsory regulation of local manufacturing which would seem to be involved. If that is the objective, the Government's legal advisers will save time and assist straightforward government by pointing out the need for a constitutional amendment.

Assisis Of The R. F. D.

As in former years, it will be okeh this winter for postmen to feed their little feathered friends. A Postoffice announcement authorizes rural carriers to distribute grain as food for birds when north wind doth blow and the presumption that we shall have snow is justified. The grain, incidentally, must be provided by "persons or organizations interested," a very broad wording which would seem to permit co-operative activity by the AAA, Jim Farley and the Audubon Society.

In all seriousness, it is a kindly, humane and by no means unimportant action which the rural carriers provide in saving birds from starvation when wintry weather comes. Nor should it be allowed to go unheralded.

The great semicircular entablature on the west elevation of the new Postoffice Building might be the proper spot. Carved there already in neck-twisting proportions is the notice that "The Postoffice Department in its ceaseless labors pervades every channel of commerce and every theater of human enterprise." The department visits every fireside, the legend continues, and mingles with the throbbing of almost every heart.

And so on and on it reads, ending with the somewhat purple conclusion that the postal service "is the delicate ear trumpet through which alike nations and families and individuals whisper their joys and their sorrows, their convictions and their sympathies to all who listen to their coming."

To this might appropriately be added: "P. S.: We also feed chickadees."

The news item to the effect that a New York fan dancer uses 18 fans is puzzling. Can it be possible that any girl has that much to conceal?

They Fight Back Very Ably.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In my opinion, your paper has improved considerably since the new owner bought it. It has pushed itself forward because it has, for the most part, printed more or less unbiased editorials and news accounts.

However, in my opinion, if you continue to print such editorials as you did in the case of the Fort Myer soldier who lost his spurs, your paper is definitely on the down grade. What was the matter—did you have to use something as a filler? Or did you simply decided to make your inane and asinine remarks against that portion of the citizenry which you know can't fight back? Or did you print that with the idea that you would get notice of displeasure from those you offended?

I have spoken to many people anent this editorial, in and out of the service and, I assure you, their opinion of your heretofore fine paper has sunk alarmingly—for you.

Can you imagine what would happen if the soldiers at Fort Myer challenged each and every person who went into that famous fort with a "Halt, who goes there," with a gun in his hand? I dare say that your paper would be the first to criticize such action. And just think what Congress would have to say about it. So, what suggestions have you?

We have as fine a bunch of young men in the Army as we have ever had, and we are proud of the fact. And we deplore such unjust criticism. As you may know, there are many things one can be court-martialed for, but did you know that the courts-martial have decreased from 46 per thousand in 1928 to 11 in 1935?

Government Housing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your paper November 23, a real estate builder found fault with Tugwell homes built by the Government; he did not mention municipal and social recreational developments included in the cost.

Federal housing was adopted by President Roosevelt after conferring with all who are interested in unemployment and better homes. Russia, Germany, Italy and Norway have built similar projects and their people have praised them.

It may be that some of these veterans don't dig in the house trenches as hard as they fought in the trenches in France, but they are older now.

No real estate builder ever did or will sell as good a house as the Government is building for $9,000. Compare these facts: They have ample foundations of rich cement; all bricks are new laid in cement mortar with joints filled, making them water and damp proof; every roof is covered with everlasting slate; all gutters, flashings and spouting are copper; the plaster is 12 shovels of sand to a bag, not 30 shovels of sand as some use, which will crumble in a few years; all heating and plumbing pipes are copper with brass fittings, good for 100 years; the paint is made of linseed oil and white lead not whiting and fish oil; the outside walls and ceilings have 4 inches of insulation, not split in half to save money. These are only a few facts concerning the merits of Government housing.

Fearing The Political Ax.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am a native-born American, one whose ancestors for several generations were born here, and a former soldier who served across the sea, also a Democrat who not only voted for President Roosevelt, but went out and made speeches in behalf of this Administration. In writing this letter I am doing a service to my Nation, people and President Roosevelt.

Now that the political ax is being sharpened to behead thousands of Government employes it seems to me that a fair and honest committee of men and women should be appointed to investigate every department in the Government service as to those emergency employes who have made good and have families to support. I personally know that there are thousands of men and women on the pay roll of the Government who are not deserving, and do not need the positions given them by friends and relations.

It is the poor men and women who have no pull that will suffer, and be driven into the Communists' ranks. I do want to see justice done, and I fully believe Roosevelt desires to be fair and I trust that a thorough investigation will be made before those who have made good are compelled to suffer. As to myself, after over two years in the Government service at $1,440 per year, I have been unable to save $20. I have a wife and two beautiful children; I do not drink or gamble and live a clean life.

Therefore, I most earnestly ask you to publish this letter. I desire to send the clipping of this to President Roosevelt, and several to Senators and Representatives who have a heart. PAUL ST. CLAIR.

License Tag Experience.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a voteless, and therefore helpless, citizen of the United States, residing in the District of Columbia, I want to direct public attention to the grossly unfair and unjust practices of the authorities charged with the issuance of automobile license tags for the coming year. The facts that illustrate said practices are as follows:

I am the owner of two cars, a Buick and a LaSalle. I did not receive an application for new tags for either car and my wife proceeded to investigate by calling at 451 Pennsylvania avenue. She stood in a long line for almost two hours. When she reached the window, finally, she was brusquely told that no information could be given her unless she had the 1936 registration cards of said cars.

She returned with the required registration cards, and was then told that the application cards had not been mailed because a warrant was out for me for a traffic violation. She inquired at the Traffic Bureau and was advised that I was charged with overtime parking of a car having the LaSalle number at Eleventh and G streets on April 22, 1936. An officer named Hess had made the charge and his copy of the ticket, alleged to have been placed on the car identified the car as a "Chevrolet." There was no charge based on use of the Buick car. Nevertheless the application for this car was withheld.

Remonstrance that the reference on the ticket to a "Chevrolet" showed plainly that an error had been made in copying the number, that the car was never parked in that locality and that no ticket was ever found on the LaSalle car, were bluntly met by suggestions that the ticket had been torn up, and that perhaps someone else had driven the car. Five dollars was demanded at first, a part of which, I understand, was to cover the service of a warrant which was not, in fact, served.

When my wife indicated that she wanted to "tell it to the judge," she was roughly informed that she would have to locate Officer Hess and arrange to meet him at Traffic Court. Knowledge of the whereabouts of Officer Hess was disclaimed and the attitude was adopted that I was guilty and had a heavy burden of proving that I was, in fact, innocent of any violation of the law on April 22, 1936, that is, many months ago.

Instead of assuming this burden I paid $2. The warrant cost was not eventually insisted on. The sum I paid is small. The principle involved is important, and has caused me to write this letter with the hope that other victims may rise to express their feelings of resentment against the tyranny of those paid to protect the public, rather than to prey on it.

Open Forums Here.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter by Mr. Bessemer headed "Open Forums in Washington" in your paper meets with my full approval, as I am a frequent visitor in your city and have often attended these lectures and debates of forums.

I have usually gone to those of the Washington Open Forum, where I heard former Senator France, of Maryland, some time ago, also former Senator Brookhart. I also heard a couple of excellent speeches at the Washington Town Hall. I am not familiar with the other forums that Mr. Bessemer describes but I believe all of them are excellent.

It is all good work and very valuable from an education standpoint. R. J. VAN SICKLE.
Greensboro, N. C., Dec. 2.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I enjoyed the informative article by Louis Bessemer on the educational aspects of Washington's forums for the discussion of current social problems.

There was a time when the Nation's Capital was referred to disparagingly as an "intellectual desert" because of the paucity of opportunities for free discussion of public questions. True there was the old Secular League founded by Lester F. Ward, which flourished for 60 years, the Washington Open Forum which was addressed by scientists, Senators, Representatives and other public officials, and the forums mentioned by Mr. Bessemer which have sprung up later.

There is one forum which Mr. Bessemer did not mention—the National Educational Forum which will have its speaker or rather leader of discussion, Dr. N. Bryllion Fagin, professor of literature in Johns Hopkins University, who will lead December 6 and 13 on the topic: Minority Groups in American Literature. The meeting is being held at the home of Mrs. Leila Marshall, 3703 Bangor street southeast, and will be open to the public. No charge is made at any of the National Educational meetings.

Henny Penny.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a reader of The Post for many years, I wish to express the pleasure I have derived from reading the articles appearing in its columns from time to time, from the pen of Grif Alexander.

His column is always most interesting, and I am pleased to note that his contributions are appearing at more frequent intervals. I trust they may appear even oftener.

This morning, for instance, under the euphonious title "Henrietta Penelope"—Henny Penny for short—he entertains us with a story of the routine life of a lone farmyard chicken. To one who was privileged to be born on a farm, and thus early to become acquainted with many of the worthwhile things in life, this story has particular appeal. N. D. PARHAM.

"A Heavy Dark."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If necessary to retire, the G. O. P. can do so with honor. Having served 55 years of the last 75 years, with 9 of the 12 presidents, during which time we have become the greatest nation of the world, the G. O. P. will gracefully retire if any other political party will assume responsibility for our future prosperity under a democratic form of government.

Marines On The Job.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The cavalry long ago ceased to be an important branch of the Army. Apparently this is fortunate for the country, if the incident of the sentry at Fort Meyer indicates the efficiency of that branch. A cavalryman without his spurs is indeed a sad object. However, the country can still rest serenely, because the United States Marines are still on the job night and day and, as ever, have the situation well in hand.

Manhattan Night

Two Russian humorists, Ilya Ilf and Yevgenii Petrov, recently visited New York and related their impressions in the Moscow Pravda. Following are extracts as translated by the Living Age.

IT was already evening when we went out on the streets of New York. A white taxi with three winking lamps on its roof, somewhat like an old-fashioned wedding coach, took us to our hotel. At first we were tortured by the thought that, in our inexperience, we had gotten into the wrong taxi, that we were ridiculous and provincial. But after having ventured a frightened look out of the window, we saw all around us taxis with the same silly lamps ours had. That made us feel a little better.

The thirty-two brick stories of our hotel were fading into the reddish night sky. We liked our rooms, but did not bother to look at them thoroughly. Quickly to the streets! Into the roaring city.

Immediately we were overtaken by a minor disaster. We thought that we would stroll along slowly, looking carefully to all sides, as it were contemplating, observing, absorbing. But New York is not that kind of a city. All around us people were, not walking, but running. So we ran too. From that time on we could not stop. We stayed a whole month in New York, and during all that time were in a dreadful hurry to get somewhere. And we ran around with such a preoccupied and businesslike air that Rockefeller himself might have envied us.

And so we were off. We rushed by fiery signs saying Cafeteria, or United Cigars, or Drugs-Soda, and others quite as attractive, but as yet enigmatic. In this way we ran up to Forty-second street, where we stopped. In all the big cities of the world one can find a place where people look at the moon through a telescope. Here, too, we found a telescope. It was mounted on an automobile, and pointed to the sky. It was run by a very ordinary man, the same type that can be seen running a telescope in Athens, or Naples, or Odessa; and he had the unhappy look of men with telescopes the world over.

The moon could be seen in the gap between two sixty-story buildings, but the curious people clinging to the telescope did not look at the moon, but much higher; namely, at the top of the Empire State Building—an edifice of 102 stories. For a long time we stood silently craning our necks. The newspaper boys around us roared hoarsely. The ground trembled under our feet, and from under the grills in the sidewalk there would come sudden gusts of heat, as if from a furnace. That was a Metro, or as it is called here, a "subway" train passing by underground. Again we rushed forward, deafened by the cries of newsboys.

One can't say that Forty-second street was inadequately lighted, and yet Broadway, illuminated by millions or perhaps even billions of electric lights, filled with whirling and leaping advertisements, made up of miles of colored lights, rose up before us as unexpectedly as New York itself rises from the infinite emptiness of the Atlantic Ocean. Here electricity is reduced or exalted, as you wish, to the level of a trained circus animal. Here it is made to grimace, jump over obstacles, sing, and dance. Edison's stately electricity has been transformed into a trained seal. It catches balls with its nose, juggles, dies, and comes back to life again. Neither the stars nor the moon can be seen. They are all dimmed by the glare of the electric signs. In the show windows, among plaid neckties, tiny glowing price-tags whirl around and do somersaults—they are the micro-organisms in the electrical cosmos that is Broadway.

New Calendar Urged.

The Gregorian calendar, devised and promulgated by Pope Gregory XIII in A. D. 1582, still is used by the world, with corrections made by Great Britain and the American colonies in 1752, but its modification to conform to modern conditions will be sought by a proposed international congress.

Reformation of the calendar is being advocated by the Central Statistical Board, a Federal Government agency, of which Secretaries Henry Morgenthau, jr., Henry A. Wallace, Daniel C. Roper and Frances Perkins are directors.

The proposed plan is to divide the year into 13 months of 28 days each, the months to begin on Sunday and end on Saturday regularly, with all holidays falling on Monday. At the end of every year there would be a "year day" or extra holiday to make the right number of days in a year, and in leap years a midyear extra holiday would be added.

For business purposes, and in order to be able to make monthly comparisons year after year, many large industrial corporations have adopted the 13-month calendar in the keeping of their records.

Other countries, including Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany, Japan, Holland, Italy and several of the Balkin states, are aligning themselves with the movement, and the United States is supporting the proposal to call an international convention to consider the reform.

Those in favor of the change suggest that the new calendar begin on January 1, 1939, which falls on Sunday. Under the present calendar this does not occur again until 1950.

Mr. Insull's Jewels.

THE IMPENDING SUIT of Mrs. Helen Coyimzoglu against Mr. "Sobbing Sam" Insull, of Chicago, should interest people without much money who strive to get the most out of a dollar. Mrs. Coyimzoglu—hereinafter known as Mrs. Coy for short—is a Greek lady who claims to have befriended Mr. Insull when he was away on his long outing in Europe a few years ago, oblivious of some indictments in Chicago.

When he did go to trial Mr. Insull made a practice, not to say a public ceremony, of riding to and from court on the ordinary 10-cent bus, and the humble poverty of the old gentleman who, with other members of his family, had once possessed $100,000,000, aroused great sympathy among the citizens. The jury let him go, but, being free, Mr. Insull has since felt no obligation to let his fellow men in on the secret of that remarkable frugality which enabled him to tour Europe, stop at a first-class hotel in Athens and finally hire an ocean steamship for his own use, all on a pocket allowance of $16 a week from a relative.

This has been regarded as the greatest feat of its kind since the purchase of Manhattan Island for $24, and there were those who have wished to let bygones be bygones, and put Mr. Insull in the Treasury Department, where his genius could do much good. He did say, when pressed for particulars one day during the long trial, "Oh, I had my friends, you know," but when asked why the same friends didn't now provide the price of a taxi to and from the court or send around the family car to fetch him he wasn't specific. Consequently, there were some cynical enough to think that maybe Mr. Insull rode the 10-cent bus under instructions from some press agent and that this practice was, in effect, a form of baby kissing.

• • • •

PERHAPS the achievement on $16 a week is too good to be true. Even at the most favorable rate of exchange $16 seems hardly likely to have achieved the apparent miracles of that grand tour and the solitary voyage on the good ship Maiotis. It might have been possible in Germany during the great inflation, but that was over and done 10 years earlier—and, anyway, this wasn't Germany but France and Greece, where things are cheap in dollars when the exchange is right but where they pile on the extras, such as bread, butter, salt, napkins and the air you breathe, and run the bills up nevertheless. At best, $16 a week wasn't much in those countries.

Mrs. Coy, of Athens, now threatens to sue Mr. Insull for $40,000 as the value of some jewelry given her in gratitude for friendly assistance over there but given back, as she says, to avoid trouble. And he is said to have admitted that he did promise the lady some jewelry which is in a vault in Paris, though not $40,000 worth. But persons who during the trial discussed with Mr. Insull his daily bus rides at 10 cents a hop, which bespoke a poverty as bleak as that of the conventional widows and orphans who lost their all with his all, are positive that he did not mention any jewelry in a vault in Paris at that time. Had he thought to mention this little cache it might have been suggested that he hock the jewels and ride to court in a taxi, or even buy a car of his own, and that might have had an unfortunate effect on the sentiments of the jury. True, the conventional widows and orphans also were riding to court on the public transportation, those who didn't walk for the lack of a dime, but there was nothing dramatic about that. Nor is it likely that any of them had any jewelry put away in Paris at the time. They didn't seem to be the type who would.

• • • •

THE INSULL TRIAL was a great confusion, involving so many companies and such complex relations that the old dictator himself, suddenly turned kind and sad for the duration of the hearings, seemed not entirely clear on their affairs. The public never obtained an intelligent understanding of the vanishment of two billion dollars of investments, and Mr. Isull received popular forgiveness because he seemed as miserable as any other victim.

But this new trial should be simpler. After all, there is nothing about $16 a week to daunt the understanding of the average man, unless here, again, Mr. Insull gets into financial pyramids to explain a marvel of economy which has commanded the awe of American tourists ever since.

As for the jewelry in Paris, it is hard to decide whether that was a joke on the jury or Mr. Insull. Had he remembered the little treasure he might have ridden to court in his accustomed state, but only at a sacrifice of the moral effect, if any, of the daily jostle with the plain people on the 10-cent bus.

Essayist of Note

By William Lyon Phelps

Thomas Carlyle.

Thomas Carlyle is 141 years old today, having been born at the tiny village of Ecclefechan, in Scotland, on December 4, 1795.

If you look at the map of Scotland and they draw a line between Edinburgh on the east and Glasgow on the west, you will cut off a small saucer-shaped piece of land between this penciled line on the north and the boundary of England on the south. In this bit of ground lived the three greatest men Scotland ever produced; her greatest poet, Robert Burns, in the southwest; her greatest essayist and historian, Thomas Carlyle, in the south; her greatest novelist, Walter Scott, in the southeast.

• • • •

With an automobile, and almost with a bicycle, one can visit all the places associated with these men of genius, in one day. We went from Glasgow through Ayrshire (now all golf links), visited Burns' birthplace, the Tam-o'-Shanter Bridge, Dumfries, the house where he died, sat in his chair at the inn, did homage at his grave, drove 16 miles across the moors to Craigenputtock, where Carlyle and his young wife lived in solitary isolation for seven years (the only thing that happened was on the day young Ralph Waldo Emerson called), saw Carlyle's birthplace in Ecclefechan (the room where he was born is about as large and comfortable as a Pullman upper berth), visited his grave in the churchyard; then we visited Abbotsford, Melrose, and Dryburgh Abbey, and reached Edinburgh at dusk.

These three men of genius were all living in this narrow area at the same time; only they were not intimately acquainted, because Carlyle was 1 year old when Burns died.

• • • •

I shall never forget the evening, when I was 17 years old, and sat down to read Froude's "Life of Carlyle," which had just appeared. It made a permanent impression on my own life. It will on yours.

After reading that, one should read David Alec Wilson's "Life of Carlyle," in six volumes; one of the most interesting biographies since Boswell's "Life of Johnson." When I read the first two volumes, I was sick; but I forgot that, and indeed they helped me definitely on the road to recovery.

When James Russell Lowell was in his last illness, Oliver Wendell Holmes came into his room one day, approached the bed and said, "How are you, James?" And Lowell replied, "I haven't the slightest idea. I am reading 'Rob Roy'."

Compliance With Social Security Act Becomes Main Endeavor Of States, With Massachusetts Principally Active.

By Joel Underwood.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Boston.

WITH THE CONVALESCENCE of many a wounded heart in these post-election days, the southern New England States, and Massachusetts particularly, are buckling down to the problem of compliance with the social security act. Despite a bitter assault on the legislation in the closing weeks of the campaign, the press has been cooperating completely in the task of educating employers and employes in their duties under the act.

Daily explanations of the requirements of the act have been featured in all the Boston newspapers and question columns have sought to clear up any particular confusions. The result has been gratifying in the opinion of John Pearson, regional director of the Social Security Board. The latest check-up indicates that employer compliance with form SS4 has been 90 per cent complete. Comparable results are hoped for in the return of employe blanks.

The New England area, however, presents problems of administration which are met in no other section of the country. Chief among these must be counted the large degree of local autonomy enjoyed by the towns and the cities. The social security act requires that in certain forms of relief the States must have comprehensive programs of their own under adequate supervision. It is on this question of the adequacy of the State supervision that the tradition of local autonomy has an important bearing.

Bay State Towns Proudly Autonomous.

RECENTLY an appropriation was made from Federal funds for the support of a program of assistance to dependent children in Massachusetts. The grant was contingent upon the existence of a State-wide scheme of assistance to dependent children under adequate supervision of the central authorities. Out of a total of 355 cities and towns in the State, however, 165 could not show that they had taken any action at all for the assistance of dependent children. The question then arose whether the supervision of the State government was "adequate" for the purposes of the Federal grant. In this particular case a conference between State and Federal officials convinced the latter that the State coverage and administrative controls were sufficiently "adequate" to justify the contributions of the Federal Government.

In the important factor of cooperation among Federal, State and municipal authorities in such a gigantic social welfare program, the autonomous towns sometimes fail to see eye to eye with the more inclusive governments on the necessity of submitting to direction and guidance. Towns are generally responsive to schemes which provide for local responsibility, but are inclined to look askance at projects which threaten the traditional right of self-government. That this particularist feeling can be a formidable obstacle to measures which call for local co-operation is a truth to which the relief administration and the interest groups behind police centralization can bear witness.

To some extent this stubborn immobility is to be found in all New England towns, but more so in Massachusetts than any of the others. Connecticut, on the other hand, is almost at the other extreme by comparison, for the process of centralization has developed to such an degree that co-operation by the Federal authorities with the State authorities automatically means compliance in the smaller units of government.

Although the tradition of local self-government may complicate the task of administration, Massachusetts has other regional characteristics which tend to expedite such administration. The community is more wealthy than most communities of similar extent in the country, and welfare legislation is a matter of long standing. The wealthy have acquired a social point of view which is rarely to be found elsewhere. One reason for this is the fact that generally the wealthy families have been the old families, long rooted in the region. One of the most practical results of this ingrained sense of responsibility is better capacity for adjustment to social experiments undertaken by the State.

Rural States Less Interested In Program.

THESE CONSIDERATIONS are more nearly true of the southern New England States than the more rural States, of course, for the latter have neither the need nor the resources for much welfare legislation. Social security officials have found the co-operation of Maine and Vermont to be satisfactory, but it cannot be expected that these States would have the same incentives to compliance that Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut have. This is not because Maine and Vermont voted for Landon in the presidential election, but because these States do not have the same industrial problems as the others.

Maine and Vermont are the only States in the New England area which have not yet complied with the social security act by adopting co-operative legislation for the administration of unemployment insurance, nor does it seem likely that they will do so for some time. Connecticut is not yet in the fold either, but it is expected that legislation will be forthcoming by the beginning of the new year.

Massachusetts is in a different position from any of its sister States in the matter of the old age insurance features of the social security act, for it alone has its own program for the payment of old age benefits. Although antedating the social security act, it is expected to work in conjunction with it.

The State plan will supplement Federal aid if the applicant for assistance is still in need. If after receiving the benefits accruing under the social security act, the recipient can prove the necessity of added assistance, such supplementary aid will be granted in accordance with procedures already established. It is not yet possible, of course, to know the extent to which supplementary aid may be necessary, but it seems safe to say that the burden on the State at the present time will be somewhat alleviated.

Three Challenges Of Act Now Pending.

THE FORCE of constitutional custom is strong in Massachusetts, and because of it the social security act is being legally challenged in the normal and usual way. In the heat of the campaign, there were, to be sure, isolated instances of pay-propaganda, but these instances were exceptional. There were even instances where anti-social security act literature was left in baby carriages, but the main attack was made in the papers and on the public platform.

Since the act is law, Massachusetts acquiesces in the fact, but private citizens are exercising their right to test the constitutionality of the legislation. There are three cases in the courts now challenging the validity of the act. One of these has been filed in the Supreme Judicial Court of the State and attempts to reach the national act through the State act.

The other two cases are filed in the Federal courts and represent different aspects of the social security act. One is a challenge by a manufacturer that he is not subject to the provisions of the act because he is not in interstate commerce. The other is a suit filed by a stockholder of the Boston & Maine Railroad to restrain the road from paying any part of the pay-roll tax on the ground that the legislation is class legislation and therefore without that due process which the fifth amendment requires.

Massachusetts bids fair to become not only the laboratory for social legislation, as it has been called, but the proving ground of its constitutionality as well.

Until the question of constitutional power is settled however, the work of administration will go on. Plans call for the establishment of 54 districts offices in the New England area. At present, only 6 out of the 54 are open for business, but it is expected that the others will be organized by January 1.

The immediate job is to cultivate friendly relations with State and municipal officials and to avoid undue interference with the arrangements being made under State authority. There are no benefits yet to be administered, of course, but a great deal of spade work has to be done. If it is true that a watchful and interested public is the best guarantee of responsible administration, Massachusetts can look forward to an efficient execution of the act.

Britain Today

By Stephen King-Hall

"Special Areas" And Re-Armament.

IN GREAT BRITAIN at the present time there are two chief topics of conversation in political circles. One is the problem the "Special Areas," the other is the Government's re-armament program.

The "Special Areas" are black spots in the otherwise rosy economic map of Great Britain. While industry in most parts of the country is booming and shipbuilders, steel and ironmasters, toolmakers and the like are complaining of a shortage of labor, in South Wales (to mention one of the worst of the four areas) trade is stagnant; one man in three of insured workers stands idle and a deep and fatalistic attitude of depression hangs over the valleys of the Rhondda.

Small bodies of unemployed men have been marching to London from these areas, and the extreme orderliness of their behavior, coupled with the constant and harrowing accounts which are appearing in all the important papers, of conditions in these black spots, has aroused public opinion. His Majesty's visit to South Wales has still further concentrated attention on a problem whose emotional appeal is as strong as its economic difficulties are baffling.

• • • •

MR. MALCOLM STEWART, the commissioner appointed by the government to administer the small sums specially voted to irrigate these industrial deserts, has resigned after publishing a report which though couched in moderate terms and written in conservative language, says in effect that if the nation wishes to set these idle hands to work such purpose can only be achieved through further government intervention.

Private enterprise will not go to these derelict areas and it is now suggested that new factories should be forbidden to establish themselves in the overpopulous London area and be given special inducements to go to the region. The government intends to set up four new armaments factories in two of the areas, but much more of this will have to be done if any appreciable effect is to be produced on unemployment in these black spots.

The truth of the matter is that they have become derelict as a result of economic progress and the inevitable movement of industries toward locations when costs are low and access to markets is easy. These unemployed men who "subsist" on the low incomes provided by the public assistance regulations, are also the victims of rationalization and of losses in export trade due to economic nationalism. Their hard lot is the price of progress, but it is now admitted, nay demanded, on all sides that the burden of paying this price should not fall only on the shoulders of those whom fate has decreed shall be the ones to lose their means of livelihood.

• • • •

ON THE QUESTION of re-armament, the government's intention to re-arm extensively on land, sea and in the air, and as rapidly as possible, has the support of all parties. No one—except perhaps the extreme pacifists—is prepared to view with any satisfaction the prospect of Great Britain at the mercy of Nazi Germany.

There is criticism of the program, and from the government as well as the opposition side, on the grounds that the question of supply of arms is overshadowing the vital issue of how the weapons are to be used in war. It is well known that the admiralty and the air ministry are at loggerheads as to whether "their lordships" of the King's navee are or are not to be allowed to control their own air force.

Should Great Britain plan to send another host of 2,000,000 to the continent in the event of war or was this break away from tradition in 1914-1918 a grievous error? How is London to be defended against air attack? Can the British fleet simultaneously hold the North Sea, the Mediterranean and the Far East, or should the latter position be abandoned insofar as operations east of Singapore are concerned? How—if at all—do defense plans and foreign policy hang together?

These are some of the questions which are being furiously debated in Lords, Commons, in the press and over the radio. Meanwhile, re-armament is being rushed on at a pace which may give some continental nations cause to think by the end of 1937, unless, course, they act before that date! And that latter possibility is—to be frank about it—causing anxiety in well-informed quarters.

Old Absecon.

("Absecon Light, famous beacon at Atlantic City, is to be auctioned off by the Government. Night club operators are said to be after it."—News item.)

There she stands: Absecon Light
Brightly gleaming through the night!
Sailor, there is no mistake—
See that bubble dancer shake!

Built a century ago——
(Not the girl, the light, you know);
What a guide in fog or mist! . . .
See that Stripper squirm and twist!

In the calm or in the gale,
Absecon will never fail;
Though she may be "Tony's Grill,"
She will guide a sailor still.

This her signal widely known:
Three short blasts by saxophone,
One bad gag and two short croons,
Then a potpourri of tunes.

One torch song, a vulgar jest——
(Sailor, sailor, home to rest!)
Six sharp blasts, a flash of green,
Two fan dancers in between.

There will be no chance to miss
Such a coastline light as this;
Liner, tanker, tug or yacht,
Here's a beacon plenty hot.

If the fog be thick and gray,
Sailors still can find their way;
Skipper, do not lose your poise,
You can tell it by the noise.

To bridge and sniff the air!
You will get your bearings there;
You know how all sailors are——
They can smell a night club far.

Here the fiddles! Here those drums! . . .
Through the fog the bedlam comes . . .
South by east a few degrees
Till you sight the flashing knees.

Absecon, oh, wondrous light!
Tall and just a little tight;
Absecon, oh, beacon true . . .
Who is that big blonde with you?

Sidestepping A Handicap.

The New York Giants won't play night baseball. They have hard enough work playing it in broad daylight.

South America is probably the only place you could hold a peace meeting now without having it break up in a war.

England shouldn't be too severe on the King for wanting to wed. He may be the kind of man who has to have help to put on a dress tie.

Models at the Art Students' League in New York are on strike. Their banners probably bear the sign, "This Place Unfair to Immodesty."

Every hour you read of Germany getting some new ally in her threatened war with France, or Italy making another alliance in a threatened war with everybody, but nobody yet knows how the nations will line up in the war between England and Wally.

After One Year

Philippines See Increasing Centralization And No Settlement Of Economic Problems On Commonwealth's Anniversary.

By Vicente Albano Pacis.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Manila.

A DEFINITE TENDENCY to centralize governmental power and authority in Manila and an unconcealed disinclination to face fundamental economic problems pending the re-definition of America's Philippine economic policy are the distinguishing marks of the first year of the Philippine Commonwealth.

In the United States the issue of the sovereignty of the different States is still alive. In the Philippines the various provinces into which the country is divided politically have no background of independence and annexation. They were, generally speaking, staked, surveyed and established as local political units from Manila. But though this be their history, town and provincial autonomy has been raised as an issue time and again, especially by the League of Provincial Governors. And, in fact, when William Howard Taft, as the first American governor, organized the civil government, he planted the seed of local autonomy by providing for local elections.

Among the measures adopted by the Philippine Assembly, largely at the instance of President Quezon, indicating incursions by the central government into local affairs are the following:

1. A law nationalizing all the town police forces, administered in Manila by the commissioner of public safety and his assistants, every one appointed by and serving during the pleasure of the president.

2. A law establishing a division of investigation in the Department of Justice, an organization aimed at the establishment in the Philippines what is hoped to be an exact copy of the Bureau of Federal Investigation.

3. A series of laws converting into chartered cities all the leading provincial capitals in the county—Iloilo, Cebu and Davao. Manila and Baguio are, of course, chartered cities already.

4. A law postponing the municipal and provincial elections, which otherwise should be held in June, 1937, to June, 1938, declaring the present incumbents out of office upon the original date of expiration of their terms, and empowering the president of the commonwealth to appoint their successors for the period until the postponed election is held and new officials elected and qualified.

All Police Power Now Found In Manila.

NATIONALIZATION of the local police is nothing more nor less than the assumption of the entire police power by the central government. The reform, however, is not so radical as it may appear. Since the organization of the Philippine Constabulary—which recently became a division of the Philippine army—insular police exercised superpolice power in the municipalities and provinces, taking direct charge of a town or a province whenever so ordered from Manila. How important the reform is regarded, however, may be gleaned from the fact that the police commissioner has the rank of undersecretary in the Department of the Interior. In fact, the new commissioner is just getting ready to go to America and Europe to study police organization and methods, especially those of New York, the Canadian Mounted and Scotland Yard.

While the national police will take care of the violations of provincial and municipal orders and ordinances, the "G-men" will handle violations of Commonwealth laws. As they will be Commonwealth officers directed from Manila by a presidential appointee with the rank of bureau director, it can be seen that no police power will be left to the local governments.

Conversion of the principal towns into chartered cities places them under the direct control of the central government. City mayors are appointed by the president, although the councilors are elected by the local voters. The net result is that the government of these cities comes under the direct control of the Manila government. If every town that reaches a certain point of size, respectability and importance is converted into such a city, it is obvious that the central government has in this policy one more means of achieving centralized control.

Postponed Elections Blow To Local Autonomy.

THE POSTPONEMENT of local elections is probably the prize act insofar as the diminution of local autonomy is concerned. At this writing reports reaching Manila state that all municipal presidents of Occidental Negroes, the Philippines' sugar center, have resigned in protest. The law vests the President with the power to appoint municipal and provincial officials who otherwise would be chosen by popular vote. By June, 1937, therefore, since the President now appoints the provincial judges and prosecuting attorneys, every principal official will be a presidential appointee.

The Commonwealth has also established a strict radio censorship; effected a strict anti-sedition law largely intended to meet the growing restiveness among the more ignorant masses, and obtained substantial success in balancing the budget despite many new items of expenditure introduced—organizing an Army, and broadening the base of the educational system by providing for free universal primary education.

The Commonwealth, however, has held its long-range economic plans in abeyance. Since the independence law was accepted by the Philippines with a plea for changes in its economic provisions, especially the limitations on duty-free Philippine exports to America and the export tax to be levied on such exports beginning in 1941, and since President Roosevelt promised to call a conference in which these matters would be threshed out, the Commonwealth has been forced into a position of having to wait.

The big question mark in the mind of the Commonwealth is whether Philippine products may continue to count with the American market or whether they have to seek entirely new world markets. The answer to the question will determine the substance of the Commonwealth's forthcoming economic plan.

U.S. Financing's Effect on Banks Is Minimized

Investment Bankers Also Informed 1936 Business Showed Big Gain.

By the United Press.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 3.—Reporting business "vastly improved in 1936," nearly 1,000 of the Nation's leading financiers were told today Government operations in finance have not conflicted with private investment banking.

Orrin G. Wood, of Estabrook & Co., Boston, president of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, told nearly 1,000 leading financiers attending the association's twenty-fifth annual convention Government operations have not proved a hindrance.

His viewpoint was supported by Edward B. Hall, of Harris, Hall & Co., Chicago, who will succeed Wood as head of the association next year. Today's greatest problem for investment bankers, said Hall, is "to find a profitable investment."

"Government withdrawal from the field would not affect the investment situation," Wood said. "Government financing deals directly with banks, and investment bankers deal directly with investors."

While the convention, which continues until Monday, prepared for tomorrow's address by James M. Landis, chairman of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, the association's industrial securities committee denied investment banking organizations are functioning "principally for large corporations to the disadvantage of small companies."

"Small companies have perfectly free access to capital markets through the medium of investment bankers," the committee said.

Jenks, Republican, and Alphonse Roy, Democrat, today collected disputed ballots preparatory to going before the State ballot law commission Friday in an attempt to break the tie vote for United States Representative in the First District.

More than 100 disputed ballots will be placed before the board.

Insull Claim Settled.

Chicago, Dec. 3 (AP).—Attorneys for Samuel Insull and Mme. Helen Coyimzoglu announced today a settlement had been made of the Greek matron's claims for $40,000 worth of jewelry she said Insull promised her while she sheltered him in Athens in 1933. Amount of the settlement was not disclosed.

2 Discoveries Disclose Data On Star Space

Hitherto Unknown Titanium Lines Found; Dust Cloud Pierced.

Two discoveries, yielding long, elusive information about absorbing matter scattered throughout space, were announced yesterday by the Carnegie Institution of Washington. Both were made in its Mount Wilson (California) observatory.

Drs. Walter S. Adams, observatory director, and Theodore Dunham, jr., found in the spectra of the stars known as Chi 2 Orionic and Chi Aurigae lines of ionized titanium which do not originate in the stars themselves.

Drs. Walter Baade and Rudolf Minkowski, by means of infra red photography, penetrated the vast dust cloud of the Orion nebula and estimated the size of the particles forming the cloud.

Occurs in Two Forms.

Interstellar absorbing material, abundant in the milky way, occurs both in gaseous and solid form. In the latter state it consists principally of fine dust particles, although chunks and larger masses may also be present.

The presence of gases is helpful to the astronomer because the more distant a star the greater the intensity of the interstellar lines produced by it, thus giving a rough measure of stellar distance. The lines also are useful in measurements of the rotation of the stellar system.

Clouds of dust particles, however, are disadvantageous. In attempting to trace the structure of the stellar system, the astronomer's difficulties are comparable with those of one who would have to pierce a perpetual veil of haze and cloud to study a landscape in fine detail.

Noteworthy Discovery.

Discovery of interstellar titanium gas is noteworthy because until now only calcium and sodium were known to exist in this form in outer space. Although the spectrum of titanium is rich in lines, only four appear to be within reach of existing instruments.

The Orion nebula observed by Drs. Baade and Minkowski shines mainly by a fluorescent light caused by the radiation of neighboring stars. The abundance of dust particles is indicated by the fact that the stars embedded in the cloud give an extremely red light. The reason is the same one responsible for the redness of the setting sun—dust and haze in the earth's atmosphere.

A new type of photographic plate, sensitive to the infra red far beyond the visual region of the spectrum, was used in making the observations. It was exposed behind a filter transmitting only infra red light.

Many Faint Stars.

Photographs recorded a large number of faint stars in the central region of the nebula which are invisible in plates taken in blue and in yellow-green light. It was found that dust cloud transmits the infra red light freely but is opaque to blue and to yellow-green light, a circumstance which has permitted for the first time a reliable estimate of the size of the dust particles in a nebula.

These particles have an estimated diameter of one two-hundred and fifty thousandth of an inch, a value close to that which produces the maximum of obscuration for a given amount of material.

Mr. Fox retired from the Government four years ago after 42 years of service with the Department of the Interior and the Budget Bureau.

He was a son of Elias Williams Fox, founder and editor of the National Republican, a Washington newspaper of the Civil War period, and a brother of the late Williams C. Fox, former director of the Pan-American Union and later United States Minister to Ecuador.

Born in St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Fox came to Washington as a young man, entering the service of the Government in 1890. He worked for a time in the disbursing office of the Interior Department and was transferred to the Budget Bureau at the time of its organization. Because of his valuable services, the date of his retirement was twice extended.

He was a charter member and past master of Columbia Lodge 285, A. F. and A. M., of Clarendon.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Martha Seabrook Fox; a daughter, Miss Rachel Fox, of Clarendon, and a son, Edward Seabrook Fox, of Richmond, Va.

Carmelites Order Anti-Red Campaign

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—The father provincial of the Carmelite Order today called on priests to launch a year-long campaign Sunday against communism.

The Very Rev. Matthew T. O'Neill, who heads the order in the American province of the Most Pure Heart of Mary, quoted the Rev. Arnold M. McCarthy, director of the National Shrine in Chicago, as saying "the sermons at all shrines throughout 1937 are planned to build up so rich an appreciation of Catholic faith and so positive a Catholicism that it will be proof against the irreligious forces, mainly communistic in origin, now at work in the United States."

Justice H. F. Stone Reported Improved

By the Associated Press.

Mrs. Harlan F. Stone said her husband, the associate justice of the Supreme Court, was improving slowly from dysentery, but would be unable to attend court this month.

There is a possibility the high court will hear arguments this month on the Washington State law fixing minimum wages for women. Justice Stone, who became ill October 13, was not present during the recent argument of five New Deal cases. He can participate, however, in all the decisions if he so desires.

Sneezing Malady Continues to Baffle Girl's Physicians

Still hopeful of finding the cause of Mary Margaret Cleer's sneezing spell, now in its fifty-sixth day, Johns Hopkins physicians and specialists continued their tests yesterday.

So far elaborate analyses, X-ray examinations, fluoroscope studies, and even psychological tests of the parents have disclosed no clue.

Mary Margaret's general condition, however, is responding to hospital treatment. While still sneezing, the frequency of her spasms has lessened, and instead of seizures every five minutes she sometimes passes a full hour without a sneze.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleer left their home at Fort Myer, Va., yesterday, and spent the entire day at the hospital with their child. Long consultations with specialists seeking to find a possible hereditary source of the trouble featured the day.

When they were through, a doctor told the father, Thomas Cleer, $18-a-week gasoline station worker, that he did not believe anything noteworthy had been found. This was the same discouraging report the parents had heard since October 9 from a score of Washington specialists.

2 Citizen Units Oppose Higher Transit Fares

Two Other Associations Divide on Expansion of Abattoir Here.

The proposal for increased transit fares met strong opposition last night from two civic groups, the Northeast Conference of Citizens Associations and the Washington Highlands Citizens Association.

The extension of an abattoir in Northeast Washington was both favored and opposed by citizens' associations meeting last night. The Washington Highlands citizens registered their disapproval of the proposed slaughter house while the Bradbury Heights Citizens Association approved granting of a final permit.

In a prolonged attack on Washington's public utilities, the Northeast conference protested any increase in street car and bus fares and voted to appoint a committee to investigate the quality of gas here. Several delegates declared they had received complaints the gas for several month has been ineffective for heating purposes.

Calling the present District pure food and drug law "antiquated," members of the conference adopted a resolution urging Congress to tighten regulations at its next session. Through its president, A. F. E. Scheer, the conference also asked that health regulations in restaurants and cafes here be made more strict, and demanded periodical medical examinations for cafe and restaurant employes.

A committee was named to investigate the right of the Commissioners to impound cars, drivers of which are accused of violating traffic regulations.

It was voted at the meeting to make a direct appeal to President Roosevelt to retain the office of people's counsel, abolishment of which has been hinted. In another appeal to the President the conference asks that the proposed new Jefferson Memorial be situated in either Northeast or Southeast Washington.

Besides their stands on the abattoir controversy and the increase in transit fares, the Bradbury Heights citizens voted to write to Traffic Director Van Duzer reiterating their request for a crosswalk on Bowen road at Ridge road southeast. C. H. Baumback, J. A. Smith and Mrs. P. E. Barton were appointed to conduct a membership drive.

Washington Highlands citizens elected D. M. Cole president. Other officers chosen were H. A. Yeager, rst vice president; Mrs. W. B. Lovejoy, second vice president; Mrs. H. D. Butler, treasurer; W. E. Nair, secretary.

Miss Vera Barnes and W. W. Barnes were named delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations and President Cole, C. H. Hall and Secretary Nair as delegates to the Southeast Council.

Army to Purchase 250 Light Tanks With 50-Mi. Speed

By the Associated Press.

Nearing the half-way point of its five-year program of modernization, the Army last night shaped plans for the acquisition of approximately 250 new tanks during the next three years.

This is the minimum number of "land destroyers" considered necessary by ordnance officers for carrying out the high command's aim of general mechanization of the Nation's military establishment by 1940.

The War Department already has in service about 150 tanks.

The standard machine of the Army, adopted after long and rigorous tests in field maneuvers simulating actual war-time conditions, is a heavily armored but speedy vehicle known as the "light" tank type, capable of a speed of 50 miles an hour.

Vermont Governor Again Is Accused Over Bank Frauds

Rutland, Vt., Dec. 3 (AP).—Gov. Charles M. Smith was rearrested on a charge of misprision of a felony today in connection with theft of funds from the Marble Savings Bank by a former bookkeeper. He pleaded innocent in municipal court and was released in $3,000 bail.

On Tuesday, misprision charges against the chief executive were dismissed on the ground they were classified as misdemeanors and could not come before the county court.

Today's charges, issued by State's Attorney Asa S. Bloomer were similar.

They were specifically: That the Governor, president of the bank, aided the former bookkeeper, John J. Cocklin, in concealing thefts of $1,000 on May 9, 1932.

Earlier in the day, Judge John S. Buttle in county court gave a sentence of from six months to a year to Lathrop H. Baldwin, treasurer of the bank, and fined him $400 for perjury.

Recital of music for viola and viola d'amore by Alix Young Maruchess in Textile Museum Thursday night; Dorothy Paul at the piano. Program: "Komm' suesser Tod" (Bach), Concerto in B minor (Handel), Sarabande— Menuet—Gigue (Marc), "La Romanesca" (16th century dance air), "Les Tendres Plaintes" (Rameau), Scherzando (Hammer), Polonaise (MS Library of Congress), Tambourin (Gossec), "Meditation Hebraique" (Bloch), "Arullo del Burrito" (Couper), "Apres un Reve" (Faure), Irish dance (Cyril Scott), Irish song (Lionel Tertis).

Mme. Maruchess is one of the few viola players who has sufficient faith in the solo virtues of her instrument to present them in recital. The reputation of the viola, like that of a worthy but retiring person shoved aside by more vociferously brilliant social climbers, suffers from inequity. It is not really the shy instrument that circumstances make it out to be, for when it is given the opportunity to speak, it has a most persuasive eloquence.

Its lovely alto tones, so rich in their veiled sonority, have an individual timbre that no other member of the string family possesses. It is particularly adapted to pensive music wherein its somber color has a nostalgic tenderness; that may be why it is not so popular as its gayer cousin, the violin. In recital, however, it has a charm quite its own, a poetic intonation of unique accents.

Mme. Maruchess is an excellent exponent of the viola because she holds it in affection. She realizes both its possibilities and its limitations, utilizing the one and having consideration for the other. Her choice of compositions had those ends in view. One was grateful to her for the inclusion of the moving "Meditation Hebraique" by Ernest Bloch, a masterly piece of melodic writing.

The viola d'amore, surviving member of a once flourishing clan of viols, has an antiquarian air. Its voice is pleasing and distinctive, but it comes to us with the sound of vanished years, an echo, as it were, of amenities and manners long forgotten.

Driving Permit Suspension Act May Be Eased

Automatic Revocation Will Follow Violation of Limit, However.

The speed which will bring about suspension of driving permits may be raised, with suspension and revocation becoming immediate and automatic.

Such a move will be considered by a special committee named yesterday by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen. Committeeman will examine the reasons for a congestion of appeals from the Board of Revocation and Review.

In announcing the appointment of the committee, Hazen said the 35-mile limit might be raised, at least for the suburban areas. He hastened to point out that this would not affect the 30-mile speed limit, but simply would allow a wider margin between the actual speed limit and the limit affecting permits.

The breach between the speed limit and the permit suspension line might be fixed at 10 miles, he suggested. This would mean that the latter would be lowered to 32 miles for 22-mile speed zones and raised to 40 miles for the 30-mile speed areas.

Under a more lenient limit, suspensions and revocations would become automatic. Under the present system a motorist who is convicted of speeding between 35 and 39 miles an hour is subject to 15 days suspension; from 40 to 49 miles, 30 days and over 50 miles, revocation.

The committee Hazen named includes Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel; Henry Nestor, police aide to Hazen, and W. H. Murphy, secretary to the revocation board.

Following his appointment, Nestor said he would propose that the revocation stage be raised to 40 miles for downtown areas having a 22-mile limit and 46 miles for arterial highways with 30-mile limits.

Guffey Coal Bill's Substitute Sought

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Bituminous coal operators from nine Eastern States launched their own organization today in an attempt to draw up a substitute for the Guffey coal bill which the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional.

The action was taken in anticipation of a strong movement in Congress next month to revive Government regulation of the industry.

The operators decided to take the initiative themselves in framing proposed regulations. The objective is to regulate competition and wages in the industry.

Bill to Permit Branch Banks Is Under Study

Glass and Eccles Reported Favorable to Measure; Financiers to Meet.

Possibility of a bill to permit branch banking being offered in the next session of Congress is engaging the attention of bankers and Government officials, it was learned yesterday.

Likelihood that such a measure would have the support of both Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, and Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, whose views on other monetary and banking matters differ widely, was said to have added to the attention being given the proposal.

That the matter will be discussed privately at a meeting of the American Banking Association studies committee in New York today was the understanding here, though there is a sharp division in the A. B. A. membership on advisability of such a law.

Senator Glass was reported to be willing to introduce a bill, probably to permit national banks to have branches within their respective Federal Reserve districts, if it would be acceptable to the House banking committee, which heretofore has prevented enactment of such legislation.

Eccles' approval of branch banking has been made known previously.

Another development yesterday was a meeting here of the executive committee of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, at which plans were made for the association to take an active part in enactment of future Federal legislation. Through Chairman Luther A. Harr, secretary of banking in Pennsylvania, the committee issued a warning that, if necessary, it would call a convention here of all the State banking commissioners in order to impress the association's views on officialdom.

Harr's statement said the association would advocate an amendment to the social security act to place employes of the banks on an equal footing under the law, and would urge that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation be given the duty of examining all insured banks.

Verdict Likely Today in Nolan 'Bribery' Trial

Arguments to Jury Begun; Defense Fails to Call Principal in Case.

With opposing counsel half-way through their closing arguments, William J. Nolan, local automobile dealer now on trial in District Court on a charge of bribing two witnesses in his wife's divorce suit to leave town, will probably learn today whether he is to be acquitted or convicted of the charge.

The Government offered but one witness yesterday after Nolan's defense had closed without placing him on the stand. The one witness was Henry I. Quinn, a member of the Board of Education, who was called to substantiate alleged statements made by Nolan that he had threatened harm to one of his former attorneys.

The attorney, William E. Leahy, denied he had heard of any threats by Nolan. Mr. Quinn was called to relate that he told an assistant United States attorney he had been informed such threats had been reported.

A host of character witnesses were called in Nolan's behalf. Among them were business and social leaders and two high officers of the Police Department. Attorneys then began their arguments to the jury and Justice James M. Proctor, fearing the trial would last until late in the evening, directed that it be continued over until this morning.

Francis M. Kearney, indicted with Nolan, had previously entered a plea of 'nolo contendere" when brought to trial. Thereafter he appeared as a Government witness.

Ex-Convict Is Held In Extortion Threat

Milton Goldfarb, a former convict, was being held at the District Jail last night in default of $3,000 bond after he agreed to return to Trenton, N. J., Wednesday on a charge of telephoning an extortion threat.

Goldfarb was arrested by Federal agents after he is alleged to have sent a threatening message to his brother-in-law, Louis Blick, of Elizabeth, from a downtown hotel here. Goldfarb is alleged to have made the extortion calls also from New York thereby violating the Federal statute against extortion across State lines.

Commissioner Needham C. Turnage ordered Goldfarb returned to Trenton for trial after the man agreed to go back. He will be returned by United States marshals today.

Bride-to-Be

By VIDA HURST

CHAPTER 25.

Becky did not know how long she sat in the Palace lobby. People passed her but she was not conscious of them. Like a girl in a trance, she stared before her, seeing nothing, now that he had gone, but Philip's face. Hearing nothing but his voice as he had spoken those last words.

"I love you! Good-by!" Renouncing her even as he confessed it. Admitting that he expected nothing. That bound as he was by the mistaken vows of his own youth, he could not compete with that of Foster MacMillan.

That name occurring to her mind meant nothing to her. She was separated from him by a barrier stronger even than that keeping her from Philip. She saw herself surrendering all that once she had held important. Not for her the home and children she had craved but the life of one eternally denied. Love was stronger than the domestic instincts implanted in her for generations. Stronger than her family's disapproval or the condemnation of anyone else. The love which burned like a white-hot flame in her heart should never be desecrated by any lesser emotion.

Under Strain.

Like a nun taking her final vow, Becky saw the pathway which she must take. But first Foster MacMillan must have the answer for which he had been waiting.

Forgetting all about the shopping she had intended to do, she went home. Her mother acted as if nothing had happened. She did not even suspect that the crisis of her daughter's life had been reached and passed during her brief absence.

But when Foster arrived that night it was obvious that she was under a strain.

"What's the matter, Becky?"

"Nothing! Why?"

"You look as if something had happened."

"I'd like to go for a ride," she suggested.

As they drove away from the house she said, "You were right Foster. Something has happened."

"You've seen him again?"

She nodded, feeling the blood rush in a hot, sweet tide into her face.

"How did you know?"

"I guessed it as soon as I saw you."

Can't Ignore It.

"It has upset me," she admitted, "more than I imagined it would. But I've made up my mind now. I can't go on with our plans for getting married."

"You think you're still in love with him?"

"I know I am."

Foster laughed, but there was a note of uneasiness in it.

"We've already discussed that. I thought it was agreed that both of us were to ignore the past."

"I can't ignore it," she said in a low, definite voice. "Theoretically you're right, but when I'm with him nothing else in the world matters."

"You'll get over it," he assured her.

"I don't want to get over it." she answered solemnly. "It would be like throwing away a precious stone for an imitation."

Foster winced.

"That's not very kind."

"The truth is never kind but I must be frank with you. It isn't that I don't appreciate the fact that you want to marry me but feeling as you do, that love isn't necessary to a satisfactory marriage, there who will fit your requirements."

"The funny part of it is there aren't," he said thoughtfully. "You are the only one I've wanted to marry. Even with Clarice—the girl I thought I was in love with—I never got far enough even to think about marriage."

Is True.

"You'll find some one."

"But what about you, Becky? This man is still married, isn't he?"

"Yes, but it doesn't mean anything."

Foster smiled.

"Isn't that what they always say?"

"In this case it happens to be true," she cried hotly. "It never was an ordinary marriage. He was so desperately unhappy at the time he married her. He thought, as you do, that he never could fall in love again."

"But he did?"

"Yes. With me," she replied, and the wonder of it glowed through her words like a lantern on a stormy night.

"It will bring you nothing but unhappiness, Becky!"

"Even so; I must live up to it."

"What will your parents say? Do you think they are going to agree with you?"

"They'll have to," she said simply. "This is one question I have to decide for myself."

Gazing into her earnest face he could see that she was speaking the truth.

"There's evidently no use arguing about it," he said. "In a way I envy you. In another I think you're a fool."

Leaves Her.

"You may be right," she smiled. "But at least I'm a glorious one."

When they reached her home he did not go inside.

"Not tonight," he said, "but I'll come again soon. I'll be interested in knowing how you get along."

Taking her hand he added, "You have been sweet, Becky dear. I'm going to miss you."

"You've been sweet, too. If you hadn't been I'd never have even considered it."

She ran into the house with a light in her eyes her parents were quick to read, although they were ignorant of the fact that Foster had not been responsible for it.

"You're looking unusually pretty tonight," her father said, glancing up from his magazine. "Your vacation seems to be doing you good."

"So much so that I am going to apply for another position tomorrow," she informed him.

Wonders.

"But, Becky, you said you were tired and needed a rest."

"I've heard of a vacancy . . . Of course, I may not get it."

"That certainly doesn't look as if she were going to marry Foster," Mr. Stern said after she had gone to bed.

"She's happier anyway. That's what we want, isn't it? I haven't seen her look like that since the last time she was with Philip Rhodes," her mother commented. An idea occurred to her which made her close her book and stare at her husband.

"You don't suppose that's who she had lunch with today?"

"Certainly not! She's probably forgotten all about him long ago."

"I'm not so sure, dear! You know he has a very magnetic personality."

"Becky has too much sense," her husband reminded her, "to go on loving a man who has another wife."

"Becky is a woman and her emotions are stronger than her head. Besides, sometimes I think we weren't altogether fair about Philip. It's quite possible that he did think he was divorced."

"Even so," thundered her husband.

"We've never approved of divorces," she agreed. "But there are exceptions to all rules. If he could make her happy . . . That was such an adorable apartment he furnished for her on Telegraph Hill."

Becky dreamed of it. Dreamed she was standing in the roof garden looking across the brightly colored flowers, at the boats moving majestically across the bay.

Morley to Discuss Mayan Civilization

Bygone glories of the highly civilized Maya Indian race and the life of their present-day descendants, who still live in Yucatan, Mexico, and Guatemala, will be described in an illustrated lecture this evening by Dr. Sylvanus G. Morley before the National Geographic Society at Constitution Hall.

The Maya predicted eclipses, invented an accurate calendar and reared magnificent temples, pyramids and even vapor baths, Dr. Morley will describe results of a year's work in the Maya country excavating ruins and studying this ancient civilization, as director of operations for the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Pictures reconstructing the life of Maya tribes in the early days, showing priests and chiefs in full regalia, young men playing a game like basketball and a maiden being hurled to her death in the Sacred Well, will be shown by Dr. Morley.

1,200 Workers Will Lose Jobs At Greenbelt

RA to Reduce Force Due to Seasonal Slump; All Branches Included.

Twelve hundred employes of the Greenbelt project at Berwyn, Md., will lose their jobs within the next two weeks, Resettlement Administration officials revealed yesterday.

Although it was explained that the reduction was chiefly seasonal, not all of those laid off will be rehired when construction opens up again in the spring.

A general reduction in the number of employes might be expected from now on, it was said, since the work is rapidly nearing completion. Opening of the "model" community has been scheduled for July 1, 1937.

The paring down process will be carried out uniformly throughout the more than 5,000 employes, including administrative officers, skilled tradesmen and unskilled laborers, it was said.

Those laborers with relief status, it was explained, however, will be given preference. Already several hundred nonrelief employes have been discharged.

By December 15, it was said, the seasonal layoff is expected to be complete. Principal cuts will be among such tradesmen as painters, bricklayers, plasterers and outside construction employes. The reduction, it was said, will not exceed 25 per cent of the present force.

Officials said they would attempt to keep as many men as possible at work through the winter, chiefly on interior work.

They pointed out that during the summer work on the roads and exteriors of the homes was pushed. The project, they said, is now equipped with a complete roadway system.

Nephew Receives Priceless Papers Of Famous Author

Tucson, Ariz., Dec. 3 (AP).—Priceless documents, believed to be of literary importance, from a battered old trunk of the American novelist and professor, Hjalmar H. Boyesen, reposed in a safety deposit vault here today, the heritage of his nephew, Hjalmar H. Boyesen 3d, 16-year-old Tucson high school youth.

Mrs. Edith Unger Boyesen, mother of the youth, said the trunk, given to her son while he was on a visit to the ancestral home in Norway, contained hundreds of letters from famous authors and poets of the nineteenth century, including Hawthorne, Longfellow, Lowell, Emerson, Holmes, Whittier, Mark Twain and countless other writers; letters from kings and queens, publishers and magazine editors; first editions of books published as far back as 1823; presentation and dedication copies; photographs of literary men, along with their calling cards.

Matron Improves; Assailant Sought

Mysteriously attacked in her room Wednesday morning, Mrs. Gertrude Stalcup, 54, matron of the Lutheran Walther League Hospice, 1420 M street northwest, was reported improved in Casualty Hospital last night.

Meanwhile, detectives continued search for the stealthy attacker who apparently beat Mrs. Stalcup with his fists and attempted to strangle her.

Physicians said there are severe bruises on the woman's neck as a result of the choking.

Two youths driving a car bearing Ohio tags were arrested by police for questioning and later released.

Mrs. Stalcup told police she was awakened by sounds in her room and found a man bending over the bed. When she started to cry out the man seized her by the throat and struck her. The intruder left without taking anything.

Tax Stamp Boost Called Good Omen

A huge increase in the demand for postage, cigarettes, tobacco and liquor stamps indicates a bigger and better Christmas for the United States, Government officials and merchants said yesterday.

The Bureau of Printing and Engraving already has swung into greatly increased production and added more than 300 employes to its roles. Parts of the huge plant are working night and day to meet the increased demand.

According to Director Alvin W. Hall, the heavy business on stamps began October 15 and has been on the increase ever since.

Doctor Weds Miss Howser At Club Here

Bride's Sister Is Only Attendant at Quiet Ceremony.

Miss Mary Louise Howser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rutledge Howser, of Washington, was married at 4:30 yesterday afternoon to Dr. Harry Porter Davis, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. David Melling Davis, of Utica, N. Y., and this city. The wedding, which took place at the Washington Club, was attended only by relatives and close friends, owing to the illness of the bride's father.

The ceremony was performed by Mgr. Edward L. Buckey. The club was decorated with clusters of pale pink and white blossoms and tall tapers burned at the improvised altar. Mrs. Thomas Carroll Worthington, of Annapolis, sang "Deep as the Night" and "Oh Promise Me."

Dr. Sterling Ruffin, a life-long friend of the bride's family, gave her in marriage. She wore an empire gown of moire in a pale flesh color, made with the sleeves full at the shoulder, a long train and collar of old lace, a family heirloom. Her hip-length veil was edged with the same lace and held in place by tiny orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and pale pink gardenias.

The bride's sister, Miss Elizabeth Gardner Howser, was her maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a frock of gold brocade trimmed with dubonnet velvet with a square neckline and short train, and a velvet poke bonnet of the same shade. Her bouquet was an old-fashioned cluster of forget-me-nots in a lace holder. Mr. John E. Reeside was best man.

A small reception followed the ceremony. Immediately after the reception Dr. and Mrs. Davis left for a wedding trip in the South, the bride wearing a dress of rust crepe and a matching coat with sleeves and collar of Hudson seal. On their return they will reside in Chevy Chase.

The bride, a graduate of Georgetown Visitation Convent, made her debut in Washington several years ago. A talented artist, with her sister she built up a successful business in the designing of monograms and made all those for her own trousseau.

Russian Troika Features Love Triangle Dance

Capital's Night Clubs Are Offering Entertaining Shows, Orchestras.

By Chanticleer.

Chastusky, a bona fide love triangle in the Russian manner, takes the stage at the Russian Troika this week. Incidentally, accompanied by new costumes and new songs all around. The characters: the beautiful Marusia Sava, alluring Eleane Lolik and the handsome Vanya Orlik.

The gist of the sketch is that there are two damsels in love with the same man and each tries to win, using all the charms and wiles in her possession. Another new sketch presents Matlo in a Russian sailor dance. The gypsy chorus offers entirely new songs and Capt. Nick will play your favorite on his accordion at your table.

The Carlton's El Patio features no floor show. But the effect is obtained through the diverse abilities of Sande Williams and his orchestra. During dance intermissions at least two of the men remain to sing with piano accompaniment. Jack Tarr has a particularly pleasing tenor voice and romps along with the best of the hillbilly exponents. Lee Harlan is a barytone with a repertoire seldom equaled—ranging from the ridiculous to the sublime. Time: 4:30 to 6:30 in the cocktail lounge; after 10 in El Patio.

Snapshot views of Cocoanut Grove's new show: Betty Lewis, resplendent in white top hat and tails, introducing the star, Roscoe Ails. He's really funny, but we Washingtonians have an idea its agin' the rules to laugh. Rosalie Lee in dances a la Harlem and rhythm tap. Lots of difficult splits. And dances on a bass drum. Betty returns for a whirlwind tap number. More dancing by Renee Villon—an interpretation of the Can-Can. In fact, with Paul Tremaine and his boys playing for your dancing, too, it becomes one of the dancingest weeks in Grove history.

Host Matt Windsor reduced his dinner price just in time to give all the people a good opportunity to renew their acquaintances of last winter with Dunya and Keunya, dance team, and Anton Garloff, the fiery dagger dancer. And, of course, the other favorites of last winter—Anna Sablakova and Kepelova who dances faster than the eye can follow.

Elsewhere on this page will be seen six of the eight Lenora's Dolls on view this week at the Lotus. Heading the show are Marie Russell and Adele Lake, dance specialists and Barrie and King, original ballroom dance interpreters. Kitty Simmons for hot-cha singing and Al Norton and his orchestra for your dancing.

New entertainment at the Ambassador's Hi-Hat, with David Naeole and his Royal Hawaiians in for an indefinite stand. It's a larger band than the late Paradise Islanders and comes direct from Renault Tavern in Atlantic City. Modesto Reyes presides at a midget piano in this combination. They do all the numbers and plenty of classical things as well. Helen Malcolm, singing cigarette girl, works with the new unit.

Toot, toot! The Florida Special is on the way—with Berk Motley and a 10-piece orchestra aboard. Coming direct to the Dude Ranch from Jacksonville. Everybody out Dude Ranch way is that way because the band is led by a very charming gal instead of the usual male maestro. Jack Shipley and two dancing girls head the bill this week.

It's all-Washington week at La Paree next week. Charlie Demma is producing and directing the local talent revue, to feature such prospective stars as Lucille and Linda, Toma Genaro, Gene Carmine, Vera Miller and others. This is the fourth and last week for the Winter Garden revue and plenty of tricks left in the Behney bag.

Here's the secret back of the Brinkley nightcap and a wicked and potent concoction it is: jigger of Bourbon, jigger of rum, juice of half a lemon, dash of mint extract, spoonful of sugar, cracked ice and serve with a Maraschino cherry and orange slice. Leave address at the Brinkley bar so they will know where to take you after the second or third.

Ida Clarke and her organ come into the spotlight at the Shoreham these winter afternoons at cocktail hour. Soft lights, sweet music, long slow highballs and pleasant companionship. Get the picture? The Vespers continue to amaze on the ballroom floor at the supper hour—with Barnee supplying the kind of music that inspires everyone's feet to action.

Mr. Walpole Honor Guest At College

Noted British Author Is Speaker Before Audience Here.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Hugh Walpole, who last night addressed a distinguished audience in Constitution Hall, was guest of honor at a reception given yesterday afternoon by Miss Maud von Woy, at Fairmount Junior College, of which she is president.

The drawing room of the Massachusetts avenue house, once the home of the late Col. Henry C. du Pont, presented a charming and informal scene as the girls grouped themselves on the floor while the older guests sat on chairs and divans to listen to the short talk Mr. Walpole made at the close of the afternoon. The gold brocade walls and Louis XVI furniture, screens and mirrors provided an artistic setting and the girls in their attractive afternoon frocks completed the picture.

Miss von Woy received in a gown of wine-colored crepe, heavily trimmed with fringe and wore a spray of mauve orchids. Mr. Walpole, who was beside her, greeted the guests with a frank friendliness which at once dispelled any formality which might have attended the occasion. A white carnation was the boutonnier in the lapel of his brown suit.

Among the guests were: The Minister of Greece, Mr. Demetrios Sicilianos, the Minister of Guatemala, Senor Dr. Don Adrian Recinos, accompanied by his daughter, Senorita Laura Recinos, who wore a black and silver lame frock with a small black hat; Mr. Carveth Wells, explorer, author and lecturer, with Mrs. Wells, who wore a black net gown and small black hat on her fair hair; Mrs. Mark Bristol, Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, president of American University, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Elizabeth Gray, and his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Charles Gray; Dr. and Mrs. Henry Fowler, Dr. Albert Lucas, of St Albans School, and Mrs. Lucas; Mrs. Edward L. Montgomery, widow of the former president of Fairmount, and her daughter, Miss Marjorie Montgomery, who have their residence at the school.

Tea was served in the drawing room on the second floor, preceding Mr. Walpole's talk, with Mrs. Dora C. Farr and Miss Ruth McClellan presiding at the tea table.

Mr. Walpole prefaced his remarks by saying he felt as Barrie did when he said he found it easier to make 300 speeches to one girl than one speech to 300 girls. The substance of his talk was to urge his young hearers to look beyond the material values of daily life and seek something more substantial on which to found their philosophy in a world of apparent chaos.

Lady Lindsay, wife of the British Ambassador, sat in a box at the lecture in Constitutional Hall last night, wearing a plum-colored satin gown ornamented with a diamond clip.

Mrs. Linke, Sister Are Dinner Hosts For Capt. Lajous

The Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos and the Minister of Nicaragua and Senora de De Bayle were the ranking guests at a dinner given at the Chevy Chase Club last evening by Mrs. Gerald Linke and her sister, Mrs. Richard Buchanan. The dinner was held in honor of Capt. Francisco Lajous, superintendent of the Argentine Naval Academy, who is in this country for an official visit.

The other guests included the Charge d'Affaires of Argentina Senor Don Hector Diaz Leguizamon; the Secretary of the Rumanian Legation, Dr. Andrei Popovici, and Mme. Popovici, who are leaving the first of the year to return to Rumania after spending 16 years in Washington; the Naval Attache of the Argentine Embassy and Senora de Smith, Baron and Baroness von Pagenhardt, Commander and Mrs. F. G. Reineke and Commander and Mrs. Calvin Cobb.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Talk about looking way ahead, you can't beat the Army. Already the powers that be at Fort Myer have tentatively set aside April 2, 3, 4 as the dates for the annual pageant. Jack Reybold, witty and clever person, and Harry Larter, who wields the brush with wicked skill, are getting together to make plans and what not. The plot or scenario of the show is still in an unknown state, but at the present it is believed that it will be the "Horse Through the Ages."

The Stephen Gibbons and Hall Roosevelt, brother of our First Lady, were enjoying their ringside table at the Troika the other evening. Mrs. Gibbons who seems tireless, dancing first with one companion and then with the other, was costumed in black with a small beret styled hat tilted to one side.

At a nearby table, also accompanied by two gentlemen, was Alice Nibley Smoot, who wears tweeds and sports clothes so well. She had on an ensemble of a grayish-brown with an off-the-face hat of felt of the same shade.

Have you ever been to a "tasting" tea? Well it seems that the Carlos del Mars do not drink any alcoholic beverages. They are planning a party for next week and when the subject of refreshments arose they were in an uncomfortable quandary. They want to serve wine to their friends, but not partaking of it ever themselves, they did not know how to select it. They have several varieties in their cellar and so Wednesday started something new with their "tasting tea" when several of their closest friends were invited in to sample and vote on the drinkables.

Diplomatic Engagement Is Rumored

Vice Consul at Shanghai, Christine Beck-Friis Linked in Report.

Story Comes Two Days After Restriction by State Department.

By Dudley Harmon.

Two days after everybody began buzzing about the State Department's drastic ruling against marriage of its officials to foreigners, comes the rumor of the engagement of one of the most popular former members of the European diplomatic set here to an American vice consul. Miss Christine Beck-Friis, daughter of the former Counselor of the Swedish Legation and Baroness Beck-Friis, is reported to have become engaged—just before the ruling went into effect—to Mr. Elvin Seibert.

Miss Beck-Friis' fiance is vice consul in Shanghai, where she now lives with her family. Baron and Baroness Beck-Friis and Miss Christine were among the most popular members of the diplomatic corps in the Capital until they left for their new post early last spring.

This romantic rumor caused quite a sensation when it was told yesterday afternoon to guests at a cocktail party given by Mr. Donald Downs. Something in the nature of a housewarming was yesterday's party, as Mr. Downs has recently moved into a Tudor house on the shores of the Potomac, up the road a way from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss. Guests wandered around the living rooms on a tour of investigation and the bar and game room downstairs came in for much admiration.

Noted in the group which helped Mr. Downs celebrate the great occasion were Mr. and Mrs. George Pulver, Mr. Ralph Snowden Hill, Mrs. William T. Mann and her sister, Miss Betty Beale, both wearing black frocks and hats to match; Mrs. Royce Powell in a mink coat and beret trimmed with a quill; Mrs. Campbell Pritchett with Miss Florence Harris; Mrs. Sims Snow, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Block, Mrs. Harold Hinton, and Md. Wolcott Waggaman, architect of the house.

At the dinner Mr. Beatty will be introduced by Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, the president of the club.

Today and Tomorrow Are Pay Days For Your Post Carrier

That smiling, hustling lad who brings your newspaper to your home each day is not "just another delivery boy;" he is an enterprising young merchant, keen to satisfy his subscribers and eager to get ahead. He's only a newspaper boy today, but he will be a business man tomorrow!

He works on a CASH basis. He buys his papers at wholesale, delivers them to you at retail and must collect the cash from you each week in order to pay for his papers. What's left is his wage for the week's work.

His margin of profit is so small that it takes his earnings from TWO paid subscribers to make up his loss on ONE unpaid bill.

Today and tomorrow are pay days for your Post carrier. He has scores of calls to make and he will appreciate your having the money ready when he calls.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Use Caffeine Wisely.

We are asked frequently about the use of coffee and tea. Are they harmful? Will they keep me awake? What can I substitute? Why are they so widely employed as dietary beverages?

In a general way we may say that they are relatively harmless pick-me-ups. Each contains caffeine, and an average cup of coffee will supply from three-quarters to a little more than a grain of this substance. It is a stimulant to the central nervous system which increases muscle sensitivity and hence power. It has little effect upon the pulse rate, except in large amounts. The rate of breathing is augmented and hence the blood is better supplied with oxygen. It promotes the flow of urine, thus relieving the tissues of excess fluid. Many employ it as a mental restorative, as fatigue and drowsiness will disappear following reasonable consumption.

Effects Depend on Quantity.

The good as well as the bad effects depend upon the quantity that is used. As with most stimulants there is a point beyond which it can and will act as a poison. Under accurate experimental control it has been shown that most of the senses respond more favorably to moderate usage. Large doses, on the other hand, may be responsible for mental confusion, headaches, or even mild delirium.

The case is reported by McManamy and Schub of a young woman who presented a state of marked delirium. Since the autumn of 1935 she had been taking 1½ grains of caffeine three times a day. Although she observed that she was more energetic, restlessness and disturbed sleep were complained of after some weeks.

In February, preparing for an important social event, she took several caffein tablets totaling 6 or 7 grains. The result was that she felt silly and elated. Because of her obvious feeling of well being she continued to take the tablets during the evening until approximately 60 grains had been consumed. She then became confused, excited, restless and finally violent. Complete physical collapse and delirium necessitated her removal to a nearby hospital. Three weeks were required for recovery, subsequent to which period her mental state was pronounced normal. While in the institution she was difficult to handle and entirely unco-operative. Red spots appeared under the skin which apparently were broken blood vessels.

Food Values Absent.

Numerous writers have described what are called coffee topers—those who have accustomed themselves habitually to eight or even a dozen cups daily. Many of these patients complain of dizziness, headache, disturbances of vision, irregular heart action and nervous irritability. Some will display twitching of the eyelids or even of the facial muscles. Greatly reducing the amount of coffee in the diet or removing it entirely in most instances will bring about an amelioration of symptoms.

Neither coffee nor the caffeine it contains is a food. Although it enables the moderate user to perform more work with less fatigue, he is burning up food materials within his own body.

The Long and Short in Bar Frocks

Midnight-blue sequins make the sailor collar and trim the sleeves of the black silk crepe ankle-length cocktail frock. The tie is bright red; midnight blue and red feathers accent black silk velvet beret with squared front.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Another Former Wife, Not Yet Divorced, Asks Opinion on Propriety of Having a Man Friend.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have often read your column just to convince myself there are many others in the world with complicated problems. And when I read of a girl who is separated from her husband, as is the case with "M. C.," your correspondent of December 1, well—that's a problem which strikes pretty close to home to me. I am 21 years old, and was married when I was 17 to a boy for whom I had an idolatrous hero-worship. We have been separated for a year, due to my inability to understand why a football (or a baseball or a basketball) should loom so large in anyone's life. As a pastime, yes, but not as a passion.

• • • •

My husband and I come from widely different backgrounds. Yet, when I married him, I wanted to be a successful wife. I learned to cook and, after our son was born, I learned how to care for a baby. My family helped us beyond all limits. And I have yet to learn that my husband's family knows we are married. I enjoy books, plays, music, beauty. You can't share these things with someone who doesn't even want them.

• • • •

Well, anyhow, last fall I came home. I have been attending business college since then, although my health isn't what it should be. My husband has informed me that he is divorcing me on grounds of desertion. I will not contest any action he brings, but I have yet to see him do anything he says he will. He has absolutely no sense of responsibility or duty. Someone has always been there to take unpleasant tasks off his shoulders. For two years out of the three we were married he was practically a gigolo. Lovely for him, but hard on my parents.

• • • •

Of course I have been going out since I have been home—with a boy I knew in college and high school, with whom I did all the crazy stunts of youngsters, such as picnics, sleigh rides, everything from A to Z and back again. In the meantime he has grown up, as I have. I doubt very much that I love him, but I loved my husband once and if that is love I want no more of it. What I want now, and this young man can supply it, is companionship and friendship.

• • • •

During my marriage I never saw my friends at all. Now I realize how much I missed them and how glad I am to be free, even to this small degree. There are no mad plans of marrying as soon as I am divorced. The young man I am now going with grew up in a beautiful home and he is saving money to buy such a home for himself in the future. I hope that through association with him I can regain my respect for men in general, which has been pretty badly shaken.

• • • •

I am sorry to have rambled on so much, but even so I have given you only a small part of the whole picture. My mind has been in such a rut that I'll probably be a case for a psychologist soon. As for my question, Miss Haworth, it is this: Do you believe it wrong for me to go riding with this young man, to go to see our friends (whose mothers are as dear to me as my own, almost), and generally act as two persons do when they are building a foundation for a lifelong marriage? I will appreciate any comment you may choose to make in this matter.

• • • •

We have not excited any gossip, as his character and morals are too well known to permit of disparagement. I admire him very much and love to be with him, discussing all sorts of interesting abstractions, and want to help him realize his great ambitions. So, there you are. And may I have some help, please? Sincerely yours. EX-WIFE.

A Proper Friendship.

DEAR EX-WIFE: Obviously there is nothing "wrong" in your picking up, in a comradely way, the broken threads of a lifelong friendship with a young man you respect and admire, particularly when this friendship receives the wholehearted endorsement of the social circle into which both of you were born—and this appears to be the case here. But I repeat in substance the same reminder that I gave to "M. C.," namely: that it is neither good form nor good policy for a married woman who is separated from her husband but not divorced to be seen constantly in the company of one man.

• • • •

The divorced woman, the widow, and particularly the woman who is anomalous position of being neither maid, wife nor widow, has a necessity for being far more circumspect in her comings and goings than the unmarried girl whose conscience is more or less in her parents' keeping—in the eyes of society at least—and the married woman whose good name has the protection of her husband's indulgence.

• • • •

Accept the young man's friendship and rejoice in the opportunity it affords for renewing your faith in and respect for masculine decency, honor, strength of character and nobility of purpose. But keep your association with him entirely open and aboveboard, through seeing that your social excursions are adequately chaperoned. So long as your friendship blooms on a landscape at all times populated with representatives of your respective families or mutual friends you need never feel misgivings about the propriety of the association. M. H.

Cocktail Frocks Of Street Length Grow in Favor

May Be Worn Under the Coat on Shopping Expeditions.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

WITH the holiday season rapidly approaching and the attending social affairs vying with Christmas gift shopping expeditions, it is necessary to include in the wardrobe, versatile frocks. The type of frock needed is one appropriate to wear under the winter coat on a tour of the shops, and also later in the day, for tea or cocktails—and perhaps, even informal dining.

A boon to the busy woman who doesn't have time to dash home and change her costumes several times are the street-length cocktail or bar frocks. These are usually fashioned of silk crepe, satin, velvet or lame; styled along simple lines. Of course, they are not all appropriate for business; it depends upon the fabric. But the length is a grand idea with a frock of this type, street coats and accessories are correct. The wearer presents the paradox of being smartly attired for evening and late afternoon and still, informal.

All of this does not imply, however, that the ankle-length cocktail frock and dinner gown are out of the picture. The new short frock is merely an addition to the wardrobe. The newest bar frocks of the long-skirt variety, however, border on the more tailored styles and are dramatized by exotic or glamorous trimming. Sleeves are above-elbow in length; this is also true of the street-length bar frock.

For the ankle-length bar costume, cocktail shoes are the correct accompaniment, preferably toeless sandals of crepe or leather. Hats, too, are in harmony—a bit more formal and perhaps frivolous in type than for daytime wear. Long gloves, of doeskin, suede or velvet, are worn with costumes of both lengths, when the sleeves are short. They are crushed smartly about the wrists extend within several inches of the elbow. They repeat the color of the frock.

Black is still the most popular choice for long-skirted bar and dinner frocks. For the shorter-length versions, brilliant tones are making their appearance ere the season advances; a delightful and cheery contrast to dark winter coats. Subtle tints named for cocktails are much to the fore at present; grayed tones of the bright colors.

Upset Routine Often Accounts For Tantrums

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THE BABY was exhausted. He had been taken to spend the week-end at grandma's, where he had seen new faces, met new situations, slept in a strange bed, had his whole routine changed. At the end of 24 hours he was so tired out that he could not even sleep. When he was put to bed he cried until he had worked himself into what amounted to hysteria and seemed unable to control himself.

As a rule he was not a fretful baby, nor had he been spoiled by too much attention and coddling. His mother was puzzled and disturbed by his behavior. He must be feverish and sickening for something. But grandma knew the symptoms. She slipped into the baby's room, sat down by his bed and began to soothe him by patting his back in time to a monotonous little tune. Presently the baby stopped crying and in 10 minutes he had fallen asleep.

Of course most young mothers would exclaim: "How dreadful! Grandmothers have no moral sense! Think of interfering with the baby's training that way and undoing the work of months!" Perhaps when they are grandmothers experience will have taught them better. An occasional exception to the rule does not spoil the child if the circumstances are in themselves unusual.

There come times when weariness and nervous exhaustion have worn a child to the breaking point. He is too little to put his feelings into words. His only means of expression is tears. Having started, he cannot stop, and works himself into a state of uncontrollable excitement which is bad for him.

An experienced grandmother knows that a rhythmic pat and a single tune repeated again and again will soothe him.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Dec. 3.

IT ISN'T so long ago that about the nastiest crack you could hand one of your girl friends was to remark, with a derisive snort, "She dresses just like a movie actress!" For those were the days before good taste descended on Hollywood like a sunlit fog from the Pacific—when the film ladies, proud in their ignorance, felt that the most spectacular and costly clothes were perforce the best.

KAY FRANCIS.

It took Hollywood a long time to change all this and to live down its lingering reputation as the worst dressed town on earth. An infusion of smart Broadway actresses arrived with the talkies, and their clothes example did a lot to calm and soothe the cinema babes. Then the studios began hiring young men of great ingenuity and excellent style sense to design the duds for their expensive chattels—with the result that such screen dolls as Kay Francis are among the best dressed women in this, and probably any other, world.

This was hammered into my consciousness the other day when I attended a very uppity afternoon party in honor of a movie star. A couple of hundred girls of the press were in the throng. Realizing it would be a fancy affair, they dressed to the limit, and beyond—while the guest of honor was beautifully and simply togged out in a black ensemble trimmed with mink, with a Russian-type matching toque. I therefore beheld the ironic sight of a lot of reporters and fan mag geniuses dressed as movie actresses being led up to press fins with a screen star dressed as a tasteful lady. It was an amusing spectacle, and I chuckled right merrily as I tore into the anchovies and ripe olives.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN — The Bert Taylors crashed open the first party of their season last night in honor of Bert's sister, the Countess Dorothy di Frasso, who was Hollywood's leading party-tosser last winter. The gay Dorothy and the Taylors like movie actors, and vice versa, and this very lively crowd is chiefly responsible for making Dream Men and Wonder Girls of the films' prominent social figures in this town. Bert's own pretty, pouty daughter Mary appeared in a movie last year, and is one of the leading photographic models of the town . . .

Treeplanting

All that planting of trees and shrubbery going on around the various Triangle buildings is part of a vast landscaping project that has been undertaken by the Procurement Division and the National Capital Parks people. In all, more than 1,000 trees and about 5,600 shrubs are to be planted, about 80 per cent of the trees being Japanese yews. There will also be elms, magnolias, evergeens, oaks and American holly.

The treeplanting is about 50 per cent complete. To those who wondered why planting should be timed with the coming of winter, National Capital Parks experts explained that the fall and early winter are the best time for planting some trees. Evergreens, for example, should be planted when they have just finished one growth, either in spring or fall, while most deciduous trees sink their roots into new ground best when their leaves are off. The magnolias can't stand the frost in their early stages; they are being left for spring planting.

The depth of the hole dug for the trees varies with their size. Evergreens are planted only 2 feet deep while magnolias need 3 or 4 foot foundations. The width of the hole depends on the size of the "ball," the technical term for the root base. Usually a 2-foot circle around the "ball" is thought ideal.

When the trees are put into place, the holes are packed with that rich black humus soil you've noticed. To prevent excessive evaporation of the bark, the burlaping in which the tree comes from the commercial nursery is left on—usually for about a year.

One of the girls over at Interior was telephoning her mother the other day to ask whether or not they were to have dinner with a friend living in Sligo Park. A fellow clerk, who couldn't help hearing, approached when she hung up and rapped his knuckles on her desk.

"Knock, knock."

"Who's there?" asked the girl.

"Sligo."

"Sligo who?"

"Sligo home or sligo to the movies."

Engineer

Enough of a diplomat to have withstood the pressure of the aviation rivalries of the Army and Navy and the cross-fire of the aeronautic industry for 20 years . . . enough of a teacher to describe the most technical advances in aviation engineering almost in terms of human interest . . . enough of a scientist to have brought his organization the Collier Trophy and to merit for himself the Daniel Guggenheim medal . . . Dr. George William Lewis, research director of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, is perhaps the one man in the Government service who could fill this bill.

Nine years as an instructor of engineering at Cornell and Swarthmore undoubtedly laid the foundation for the skill with which Lewis can interpret the most complex engineering developments so that any police court reporter can understand. (We once profited by a personal demonstration.) But also responsible is a perpetual good humor, a fund of illustrative anecdotes and—above all—the patience of a diplomat. Crank inventors are obstinate, sensitive souls, where their inventions are concerned, but Dr. Lewis has rejected hundreds of the weirdest contraptions that men ever thought capable of flying and has made the inventors like it! Formally, or informally, he has served as adviser upon every important aviation development, to bitterly competitive aeronautic engineers and industrialists and mutually jealous Navy admirals and captains, and Army generals and colonels. Yet for 20 years Lewis has managed to defy the fate that usually befalls those who give advice . . . a perpetual reminder of his infinite tact is that he maintains the NACA laboratories at the Army's flying headquarters at Langley Field, Va., and his office in the Navy Building.

The many aviation improvements contributed by the NACA have been the result of the co-operative research efforts of the NACA's laboratory staff, but the magnificent array of wind tunnels at Langley Field, unmatched throughout the world, are largely Lewis's creations. With an eye always to foreign developments and the idea of going them one better Lewis has been largely responsible for the NACA's tank, the free spinning wind tunnel, the 300-mile high-speed wind tunnel and the new tunnel, the best of them all, still in the blue print stage. It is for this scientific work with the NACA that Dr. Lewis will be awarded the Daniel Guggenheim medal tonight at a dinner of the Council of the Institute of the Aeronautical Sciences.

While we're on the subject of aviation, the Bureau of Air Commerce will retire its first employe this month. The bureau was organized in 1926 and Mrs. Edna E. Hastings, a clerk in the mail and files section, is the one to make history by being the first to reach retirement age. Yesterday was her birthday and the great event was celebrated with a staff party.

Postals

A wind-up hearing on the Durand case will be held this afternoon over at the National Labor Relations Board . . . A. F. G. E. President Col. Charles I. Stengle is back from Tampa, plenty satisfied with the way the A. F. of L. convention took the A. F. G. E. program to its breast. . . . James G. Yaden will be guest of honor at tonight's meeting of the Procurement Division Lodge; dancing and refreshments are the other attractions.

As for tomorrow, at 1:20 at the Harrington, H. Eliot Kaplan, executive secretary of the National Civil Service Reform League, will speak on civil service reform at a luncheon sponsored by the American University's school of public affairs. . . . In the evening the Social Security Board Union will hold its dance at the Wardman Park, and the Rainbow Division veterans theirs at the Broadmoor.

House Office Building Pet Washes Windows, Turns Flips—and Even Catches Rats, While Arlington Kitten Is Mothered by Poodle.

Washington had two animal stories yesterday.

One was of a cat that washes windows, turns backflips and yields to none of its kind as a ratter—and does all those things at the old House Office Building.

The other story is that of Fluffy, a tiny French poodle, which has been mothering a homeless white kitten.

Tip, the tom, is one of the most interesting sights in Washington, even if his light is hidden under a bushel of Congressmen. If you don't think so, ask Superintendent Edward Brown of the old H. O. B., or, still better, Charles E. Scheer, who is Tip's master and engineer in charge of the heating room.

Dogs are barred from the building, but the regulations say nothing about cats, and when Tip was born in the heating room two years ago he stayed on.

Scheer, a practical sort, taught Tip to wash windows with his paws and the tomcat, spurning a safety belt, has become proficient in the art. He is also a gifted acrobat and, according to Brown, a rat catcher beyond compare.

"I guess he inherited that trait," said Brown. "His mother was death on rodents. But doggone if she could wash windows or jump over your outstretched arm."

Tip's principal amusement is riding the elevators. All of the building employes and some of the Representatives think a whole lot of the pet. Once he disappeared for a few days and Scheer was as worried as he could be until the big tommie returned one morning as suddenly as he had departed.

Fluffy, foster mother of a kitten.

Fluffy, the poodle, owned by Lee Atkin, of Arlington County, Va., has been mother to Barley, a kitten, found on the Atkin doorstep last August.

Barley was more dead than alive when he was found. But Fluffy, never before partial to the enemy feline race, took over his care, feeding and education, with the result that the kitten is rapidly growing up to his foster mother's size.

Thousands See Yuletide Fete In Georgetown

Santa Clause kept step with the beat of the drums in Georgetown last night as the Georgetown Business Men's Association marked the opening of the Christmas season with a parade up gayly lighted M street.

While thousands lined sidewalks along the route, more than 50 floats and decorated cars and hundreds of marchers rolled and tramped through the center of the Georgetown business section.

The holiday spirit was manifest everywhere under the red, green and yellow bulbs lining M street as Georgetown residents, ranging in age from babes in arms to elderly men and women, watched the Christmas procession move from Twenty-eighth street to Thirty-third, up Thirty-third to Volta and then in Wisconsin avenue to Water street.

Heading the parade were cars carrying Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police; Archer Haycock, president of the Georgetown Business Men's Association; Percy Klein, chairman of the parade committee; Arthur Carroll, committee member and Theodore Grape, president of the Federation of Business Men's Associations. They took their places in the reviewing stand at Potomac and M streets.

Among the unusual floats were one representing a steam engine and car and one showing a snow-covered postoffice. Music was furnished by the Elks Boys Band. The parade was originally scheduled for Wednesday night, but was postponed because of inclement weather.

83d Traffic Victim Killed By Street Car

Son of Dr. S. V. Mead Dies in Florida as Auto Overturns.

Police were called last night to remove the crushed body of the city's eighty-third traffic death victim from under the wheels of a street car.

He was James Jones, 60, colored, of 122 D street northwest. The accident occurred at First street and Pennsylvania avenue.

From Florida came an Associated Press dispatch telling of the death of Wilbur Mead, son of Dr. S. V. Mead, of 3239 Rittenhouse street, northwest, when his car overturned in a ditch near Lakeland. Young Mead was a student at Florida Southern College. His father, well-known Washington dentist, has a winter home near Auburndale, Fla.

Another accident occurred yesterday at the dangerous Westmoreland Circle, where Massachusetts avenue meets the District Line. A car in which two men and two women were riding overturned. Fortunately none was hurt and police did not make a report of the mishap. Only a few weeks ago a life was taken in an accident at this point.

Two Others Hurt.

Two persons were injured, one seriously, as the Permit Board revoked two driving licenses and suspended 27 others because of speeding.

Police said Myer was struck by the truck owned by the Washington News Co., 1121 Fifth street northwest, which was being operated by George W. McDonald, 18, of 520 Seward square southeast.

Myer was treated at Emergency Hospital where his condition was said to be serious last night. McDonald was charged with reckless driving at the First Precinct Station.

Capital Youths Held On Auto Theft Charge

Wilmington, Del., Dec. 3 (AP).—United States Commissioner A. F. Polk held two 18-year-old youths, booked as Emmet Brown and William W. Green, of Washington, D. C., in $2,000 bail each today, charged with interstate transportation of a stolen automobile. They were held for action of the Federal grand jury.

The youths were captured yesterday after a 12-mile chase. Capt. H. C. Ray of the State police, said they disabled a police automobile, outdistanced Dover officers, and were finally arrested at Little Massey, Md. The chase began at Dover, where a gasoline station attendant said the boys sped away without paying for 18 gallons of gasoline.

14 Victims Identify 'Boot and Spur' Bandit Trio; Young Gunmen Readily Admit Many Holdups

Post Staff Photos.

Left to right are James C. Steele, Elizabeth Shelton, Thelma Shelton and Gordon Riggles. Inset is Private Frank Ayers. All were victims of "boot and spur" gang. They identified the gang last night at the police line-up.

The bizarre career of Washington's "boot-and-spur" bandits reached its final chapter last night when 14 victims of the robberies to which the three young gunmen have confessed crowed into detective headquarters and identified them in the police line-up.

In the bright glare of the show-up lights, the trio—William N. Beck, 21; Jack Joseph Kurz, 19, and Paul Leon Burger, 19—willingly cooperated with the men and women they have admitted to have robbed during the past several months.

First identification was made by Private Frank Ayres, a Fort Myer soldier, who was robbed of his automatic pistol, ammunition and spurs as he paced his post November 16, only a few hours before the bandits became more active and bolder than they ever had been before, and earned the title by which they became known to police.

Ayres appeared in his uniform. He sullenly approached the prisoners, who were surrounded by detectives.

"That fellow there," he said, pointing to Beck.

"And that fellow there," he continued, pointing to Burger.

He did not identify Kurz, police said, because Kurz was at the wheel of the automobile the night Ayres was robbed.

Both Beck and Burger smiled back sullenly. The gun and spurs they took have been identified. They arrived here from North Carolina, where Burger and Kurz were arrested last week.

Next to view the prisoners were Elizabeth and Thelma Shelton, of Arlington, Va., and Gordon Steele and James Riggles, both of Fairfax, Va., their escorts on the night they were robbed on the Mount Vernon boulevard about two weeks ago.

All four identified Beck, Burger and Kurz.

"Have you seen these people before?" the confessed gunmen were asked.

And each youth corroborated the identification by answering that he had seen the two young women and the two young men on the Mount Vernon boulevard the night of the robbery.

A Mrs. Anna Finkelstein, who operates a grocery store in Arlington, then identified Burger and Beck as the men who had robbed her some time ago.

Next came Walter Holt, held up and robbed of his automobile and his money in Rock Creek Park shortly after the sentry's equipment had been stolen. At this time the bandits forced Holt's girl companion to drive away with them, and released her a short time later. The girl, Virginia Ash, said the men shoved her from the car and sped away.

Holt identified all three of the men, and they in turn said they had seen him in Rock Creek Park.

Among others to identify the trio were Garnett Korner, an aged fruit dealer with a white Van Dyke beard, who was robbed of a small sum of money on Rockville pike, and Mrs. Florence Horton, operator of a High's ice cream store in Conduit road.

Seventeen other prisoners, picked up by Lieut. George Fowler's robbery squad in a round-up of suspicious characters in various pool rooms, were in the line-up. None of them was identified, however, and they were remanded to their cells until their cases can be more fully investigated.

Before Burger, Beck and Kurz were locked up again, they were allowed to see their parents.

Husband's 'Suicide' Trick Fails As Unsympathetic Wife Leaves

Leroy Redman's frick was a dud.

It worked the wrong way. It was terrible.

He had a romantic scheme figured out to win back his wife after a family spat Wednesday night, a really gifted inspiration.

He would commit suicide and show her. Leroy drove his car onto the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge and left a note advising her of his poetic death.

Leroy omitted one detail which would have convinced her of his passion. Instead of jumping in the Anacostia River he went home and went to bed.

Then things began to happen which he did not anticipate. Police found the car; the note; reporters arrived; Theodore Myers, driving to his home in Maryland, smacked into the patrol wagon.

Officers found Mrs. Redman at her brother's home. At 2 a. m., mad and skeptical, she was led to the bridge. She led them back to the Redman abode at 1114 F street northeast.

There was Leroy, fast asleep.

Then she got madder. She was maddest of all yesterday when the newspapers came out, telling about how her husband had trifled with such a beautiful concept as suicide for love, and instead had only gotten himself accused of parking on a bridge.

The humiliation was too much. Ohhh!

Yesterday afternoon she packed her dresses and things and moved out, leaving Leroy holding his head in his hands. Women are awfully hard to understand.

'Teach Evils Of Drinking,' Schools Told

Group Says D. C. Board Is Ignoring Statute of 50 Years.

A claim that the Washington public school administration is lax in its enforcement of a 50-year-old statute requiring that pupils be taught the effects of the use of alcoholic drinks and narcotics was heard by school officials yesterday.

Several members of a committee representing nearly 50 organizations opposed to the use of alcohol, tobacco and drugs appeared before a special committee of the Board of Education, and urged them to "save our children from the evil habits that they cannot break."

William V. Mahoney, a leader of the delegation, told the board committee, which included Robert A. Maurer, chairman; Mrs. Lenore Smith and Mrs. Mary McNeill, that "I would rather have my grandchildren, now in school, do without arithmetic, if there was a choice between learning figures or learning the effects of alcohol and narcotics."

Mahoney told about a questionnaire that had been given out "at random" to school children. The questionnaire asked the pupils if they had received "any instruction in the Washington public schools during 1936 regarding the evil effects of alcohol?—of tobacco or other narcotics?"

Mahoney had 121 filled-in questionnaires to show the school officials (there are 95,000 pupils in the school system), and he said that about five out of every seven pupils answered "No."

Dr. E. B. Brossard, as chairman of the allied organizations' committee, also spoke and introduced Mrs. Bertha M. Davis, a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and of the Anti-Cigarette Alliance; the Rev. Charles H. Butler, of the Anti-Saloon League; R. G. Garber, of the Allied Dry Forces; William T. Tucker, Mrs. Harvey Wiley, Mrs. E. L. Busbee and Mrs. William J. Hughes.

Mrs. Hughes told the board members that the home is no longer the place to teach the evils of drink and narcotic drugs.

Why, more mothers smoke cigarettes than teachers," she declared. "It's plainly a matter for the teachers to handle."

Manhattan Cocktail.

TRIUMPH: C. B. Cochran, the British producer, signed Elisabeth Bergner to appear in Sir James Barrie's "The Boy David" eighteen months ago. Miss Bergner then became ill, and the frequent delays necessitated thereby cost the producer $75,000 . . . Barrie was upset by these events, and insisted that action be taken. Taken it was . . . in the form of a $50,000 promissory note issued by the ailing star, guaranteeing her appearance at the premiere last week . . . Elisabeth Bergner did appear at the scheduled opening gave an excellent performance, and was lauded by everybody—except Sir James Barrie. He couldn't come to the theater—because he was sick!

CHARM: Lola Lane and Jane Dickson returned to New York this week after a dancing engagement at the Dorchester House in London . . . During the summer they vacationed in Cannes, where mutual friends introduced them to King Edward and Mrs. Simpson. When Miss Lane was introduced, the King extended his royal hand and, as is customary, she kissed it . . . Miss Dickson, who is made of sterner stuff, then was introduced, and instead of kissing the ruler's outstretched hand—offered her own in handshake . . . The King smiled, clasped her extended hand—and kissed it.

DEFEAT: Charles Laughton, who is starred in United Artists' "Rembrandt," was asked by the publicity department to issue a formal statement in connection with the premieres in various sections of the country. Laughton obliged, and inscribed: "If 'Rembrandt' does nothing else, it might make people want to go and look at his work in our galleries" . . . This publicity statement was rejected by the press agents. They felt that the word "galleries" might hurt the sale of higher-priced orchestra seats.

WEALTH: At the Cotton Club last night Bill Robinson retired to his dressing room after the show, donned his street clothes, and then pocketed the $3,000 bankroll he carries. "Say, Bill," a friend cautioned, "that's a helluva lot of dough to be toting around" . . . Well, what d'ya expect," Robinson stated. "A guy can't go around broke!"

ILLUSION: Friday evening, the night before "St. Helena" closed, Fred Allen and Max Gordon passed the theater where the Napoleon play was being presented. Gordon pointed to the photo of Maurice Evans, which revealed the actor in a Napoleonic pose. "That Evans did a marvelous job in this show," Gordon commented . . . Allen studied the picture. "Yeah," he agreed, "but tomorrow night he'll have to take his hand outa that coat—and help move the scenery out!"

In HOLLYWOOD With Jimmy Fiddler

HOLLYWOOD, DEC. 3.

Again I come yowling about the movies' crying need for story ideas, which daily grows more acute. New high prices are being paid for plays and published yarns. More originals have been bought this season than ever before. Studio reading staffs have been heavily augmented in hopes of ferreting out fresh plots from foreign publications. Newly formed "idea departments" peruse newspaper and topical magazines in search of suggestions; that is how "China Clipper," "Country Doctor" and "Sing, Baby Sing" were conceived.

BARBARA STANWYCK.

Unhappily the greatest story lode is closed. I refer to that vast, unexplored mine, the public—your story and your neighbor's story. If you submit a manuscript to a studio, it will be returned, unopened. Movie companies thus guard themselves against hundreds of plagiarism suits.

If anyone can evolve a safe and sane method by which producers may explore the public field for ideas, his fortune is made. Movie moguls realize there are thousands of excellent picture plots floating around in American homes, unable to reach buyers. If you seek wealth, waste no more time writing stories; devote that time to figuring out a way for amateur authors and studios to get together.

At the directors' table in the M-G-M cafe there is a baccarat game. All who dine must play; the loser pays the total check. Yesterday I strolled into the cafe for a late snack and two bus boys were playing the game. "For what stakes?" I inquired. "To see," one answered, "which of us takes the dirty dishes to the kitchen."

Gum chewing has become as common as cigarette smoking among the players. Since the day I saw Barbara Stanwyck stow a wad under her tongue while she played a scene, I have been watching other stars. I have been surprised to discover how many chew constantly, and nearly all manage to hide the gum somewhere in their mouths when they work. The habit, it is said, relieves nervousness.

Pat O'Brien employs the husbandly trick of presenting his wife with peace gifts when he has been a bad boy, or to make up for family spats. Not long ago he appeared on a radio program, and in the spirit of exuberance he used the check to buy Mrs. Pat a billowy wrap. Of course she went into raptures, but after several minutes of parading before mirrors, she regarded O'Brien with a small frown. 'Pat," she asked, "did we have a quarrel?"

Dave Apollon to Bring "Star Parade" to the Capitol; Will H. Hays Discharges Valuable Duties in Europe

Dynamic Young Russian Recruits Stellar Talent From the Music Halls of Europe and Adds a Washington Dancer; Hays Returns From Survey of Foreign Field on the Normandie Next Monday; Unique Musical Feature in "Born to Dance."

SINCE we stepped out yesterday and announced Leon Errol and a new Fanchon and Marco stage revue for the Earle Theater the week of Friday, December 11—entirely out of turn—it seems no more than the part of simple justice to say today that Loew's Capitol Theater, on the same date, also will be able to brag a little about the quality of the living portion of its entertainment.

BELL.

It seems that that ebullient and high-pressure young fellow known by the name of Dave Apollon has been booked for the Capitol, along with his latest assemblage of revue talent, which is announced under the more or less intriguing title of "Dave Apollon and His 1937 Star Parade."

There can be no gainsaying that this Apollon fellow is one of the most dynamic personalities left in vaudeville, or that he always supplies entertainment of the first rank. His string orchestra recruited principally from the Philippines may have grown a little too familiar through long usage for the best novelty effect, but, in the main, Master Apollon has consistently furnished the Capital with rousing and first-class diversion down through the years.

This season he is said by those who should know to have surpassed himself in the matters of new faces and figures and strange twists of his usual revue formula. One is led to believe that Mr. Apollon spends four months of every summer in Europe scouring the music halls, as the saying goes, for new talent for his American enterprises. This time he has raided all of the sources of distinguished continental ability.

But, anticipating a recital of the "names" in the new act, it should be set down that one of the major features of the offering is the 15-piece Tropical Swing Band, which, one suspects, will be found to have that old Filipino ensemble as its basis. This new organization, however, is reputed to combine brass and strings in a most unusual manner.

Now, to get down to the headline stars—in addition, of course, to Dave Apollon himself, who is capable of providing a complete evening of delightful pastiming single-handed—there are, or will be, Johnny Barnes, Washington's own dancing star; Charlotte and Charles Lamberton, direct from the London Palladium, two deaf mutes who amaze audiences by the rhythmic skill of their dancing; Tommy Trent and his "Puppet Parade," Lyda Sue, Viennese dancer; the Three Bennet Sisters, Harold Aloma, genius of the Hawaiian steel guitar—maybe that is where I got the notion that those Filipinos are still around—Yvonne Moray, Ruth Delrio and the Savoy Dancing Beauties.

Altogether, the week of the eleventh inst. promises a considerable renaissance of that gay old institution known colloquially and reminiscently as the two-a-day, even if it will go on four times daily in both houses!

And so to lunch at the Willard with that lusty gourmet of the gelatins, Signor Antonio Muto, Poo-Bah, panjandrum and general factotum of the Will H. Hays office in the National Capital. Tony on this utterly amiable and congenial occasion was filled to the brim with enthusiasm over the accomplishments of his boss, Mr. Hays, on his present junket of international amity, from which he is returning from Europe aboard the S. S. Normandie, arriving in New York on Monday. There will be more of this at a later date—in the so-called dramatic "lead" for the drama section on the ensuing Sabbath would be a friendly hint—and it is well worth recounting for the benefit of those who look upon Will H. Hays merely as a sort of "stuffed shirt," exercising a perfunctory censorship over the plans of the producers of motion pictures, that his duties extend far afield from there. His functions are hugely diversified and are of inestimable value to the motion picture industry, as we shall endeavor to point out, come Sunday.

But this Signor Muto chap is by way of being quite a person on his own account. This noble trencherman's favorite breakfast dish is rabbit, stewed in rich and savory wine, and for luncheon he dabbles delicately with T-bone steaks, thick soups, starches, sweets and frozen desserts, no end. Me, it being breakfast for a morning newspaper guy, I merely toyed with a nestful of eggs, done in Mrs. Willard's best Poached Benedict style, a few slabs of tender ham, a plate of buttered toast, a flagon of orange juice and few minor trifles that were of no great importance—except on the check.

There is a musical novelty in an early sequence of "Born to Dance," the new Eleanor Powell vehicle, coming to the screen at Loew's Palace following the run of "Love on the Run," the current attraction, upon which, I think, no one has commented to date.

It is the unique device of supplying musical accompaniment for voice with an ensemble of ocarinas, those funny-looking woodwinds that resemble big black ostrich eggs more closely than anything else. They have a tone distinctly and uniquely their own and never before have been utilized on the screen in such harmonic combination—the sizes and tones vary almost to the degree that saxophones refuse to adhere to a single fixed pattern—as "Born to Dance" discloses.

It is interesting to note further that while Reginald Gardiner is playing the National next week in "The Show Is On," with Beatrice Lillie and Bert Lahr, he also will be on view, come Thursday, in his inimitable conducting of an invisible orchestra in "Born to Dance." That is, he will be unless "Love on the Run," with Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Franchot Tone, should take it into its head to run a third week at Thirteenth and F.

Those who have an eye for the theater's enduring bits of whimsy are recommended to "The Wizard of Oz" that is to be presented in Roosevelt Auditorium on Saturday morning. The title, of course, is indelibly associated in the theater-going mind with the team of Montgomery and Stone, but the fanciful creation is still a fine entertainment without their services.

RKO-Radio Has Nice Film List For December

Bobby Breen, Boy Singer, Among Stars Soon, to Be Seen and Heard.

Bobby Breen, the 8-year-old radio singer, whose first appearance in motion pictures last year established him as one of the foremost child actors, makes his second appearance for RKO-Radio Pictures in "Rainbow on the River," which is among the company's releases for December.

Other features released this month are "Wanted: Jane Turner," "The Plot Thickens" and "Night Waitress."

"Rainbow on the River," from the novel by C. V. Jamison, has in its cast supporting Bobby such well-established screen players as May Robson, Charles Butterworth, Louise Beavers, Benita Hume, Alan Mowbray and the Hall Johnson Choir. Kurt Neumann, who directed Bobby's first screen effort, megaphoned "Rainbow on the River," under the production guidance of Sol Lesser.

Lee Tracy Comes Back.

"Wanted: Jane Turner" serves as a comeback vehicle for Lee Tracy, with Gloria Stuart, Paul Guilfoyle and Judith Blake also featured. Edward Killy directed and Cliff Reid was producer.

"The Plot Thickens," is the fifth of the popular mystery-comedies by Stuart Palmer produced by RKO-Radio. James Gleason and ZaSu Pitts act as the "detecting" pair, with Louise Latimer and Owen Davis, jr., in support. The direction was handled by Ben Holmes under the production supervision of William Sistrom.

"Night Waitress" offers a new screen team in Margot Grahame, noted British actress, and Gordon Jones, former gridiron star. Other members of the cast are Vinton Haworth, former Washingtonian, Donald Barry, Arthur Loft, Marc Lawrence, and others. Lew Landers directed with Joseph Henry Steele as production associate.

Back to the Abbey.

Denis O'Dea, one of the Abbey Theater players who recently visited the United States to appear in RKO-Radio's production of "The Plough and the Stars," sailed Wednesday on the Queen Mary for Ireland and his native Dublin.

O'Dea has just finished a stage engagement in "Green Waters" and returns now to the Abbey Theater under his regular contract which calls for a certain number of appearances each year. The Dublin actor, before sailing, said he did not know what play the Abbey was doing next, but that it didn't make any difference to him. Of the group which came over to play in the film Barry Fitzgerald has remained in Hollywood, where it is believed he will bring more of his comedy to the screen.

"The Plough and the Stars" is a film version of the famous Sean O'Casey play, and in it Barbara Stanwyck stars, with Preston Foster and Una O'Connor featured.

Policeman Sued With Pumphrey In Bond Racket

D.C. Motorist Says He Gave Prince Georges Officer $26.70; Wants $15.

Elmer Pumphrey, bondsman, of Suitland, Md., and Albert Anderson, Prince Georges County policeman, attached to the Hyattsville station, were named defendants in suits filed yesterday by a Washington motorist, who claims he was victimized in the alleged police-bonding racket.

The suit against Pumphrey was the fourth entered against the Maryland bondsman since evidence purporting to disclose a lucrative "graft" ring in Prince Georges County was presented by the Keystone Automobile Club to the grand jury on October 20.

Leonard Parker, 1216 Tenth street northwest, plaintiff, asks the court to award him $50, which he claims was paid to Pumphrey for premium on a $1,000 bond.

He also seeks recovery of $15 from Officer Anderson on the grounds the policeman acepted $26.70 to "dispose" of the case, and paid only $11.70 to the court treasury. Both suits were filed by Louis Lebowitz, attorney, of Mount Rainier, with Justice of the Peace Fred C. Lutz, Riverdale.

In an affidavit attached to the suit, Parker avers he was arrested May 17, 1936, and charged with exceeding 60 miles an hour. He alleges the $50 bond fee paid to Pumphrey was never filed in the police court.

A special committee has been appointed by the Federation of Citizens Associations, it was revealed last night, to make a "thorough" study of the charges against certain members of the police department with a view toward making recommendations to the State Legislature for a change in the set-up.

A proposal for a "merit" system, it is believed will be included in the committee's report. The police, at present, are political appointees.

HOLC Reports Foreclosures Cut

For the second successive month the Home Owners' Loan Corporation announced yesterday a sharp decline during October in the number of foreclosures authorized by it.

The corporation said October foreclosure authorizations were 6,256, representing a decrease of 1,013 from September, and the lowest since May.

Properties actually acquired up to November 1 represent 1.4 per cent of total loans, officials said.

MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

Bad Luck or Bad Play?

Many players think they are unlucky when the truth of the matter is that they are unskillful. Most of the losses they charge to unfortunate guesses are actually the result of bad play. Typical is the hand below, played by one who consistently loses at Bridge, and just as consistently sails at fortune.

South, dealer.

The bidding:

South	West	North	Pass
1 N T	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the Queen of hearts and South won with the Ace. He saw that in order to bring in his contract he would have to knock out both black Aces. The danger was all too apparent. If West had both Aces, he would run the hearts before South could make nine tricks; if West had one Ace and that were knocked out while dummy still had the King of hearts, West would have no entry to run the hearts; but if East's Ace were attacked first, he would knock out the King of hearts, and West would still have his Ace for entry to the rest of the heart suit.

South fidgeted and mentally tossed a coin. Finally, he chose to lead the King of spades, and lost the game. East won with the Ace and returned a heart. And, as South had foreseen, West got in with the Ace of clubs to run the rest of the hearts.

"Tough luck, partner," said South, "If I had started on the clubs instead of spades, we'd have made the rubber."

North politely refrained from pointing out what was obvious to him. There was no reason for South to guess at all. Had he simply allowed West to hold the first heart trick, he could have won the second heart, and started with either black suit. If he happened to start with spades, East would not have a heart to lead and the club entry would therefore do West no good. South had simply never heard of holding up with a double stopper.

PITTSBURGH NAMED HUSKIES' FOE FOR ROSE BOWL

This Morning . . .

Organized baseball has a tremulous ear cocked for the decision long overdue from Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis in the now celebrated Feller case.

L'Affaire Feller has placed the white-haired baseball czar squarely on the spot. In any decision he comes up with he is risking the wrath of one faction, with the minor leagues solidly arrayed on one side against the major leagues on the other.

POVICH.

You'll notice that it has been more than two months since the squawk by the Des Moines club of the Western Association first brought L'Affaire Feller to the attention of Judge Landis. The judge needed two months to think it over. It's as ticklish a ruling as he has ever been confronted with.

Just to refresh the history of the case, you remember that the Des Moines club demanded that Feller be turned back to the minor leagues because of a violation of the major-minor agreement that big league teams are not permitted to sign free agents, except college players, unless they had previous experience in organized baseball.

That the Cleveland Indians signed Feller direct from the sandlots is undisputed, even though they did seek to circumvent the rule by signing the 17-year-old pitching prodigy first through their Fargo, N. D., club, which in turn assigned the lad to the Cleveland-controlled New Orleans club, which passed his contract on to the Indians despite the fact that Feller had never played a minor league game.

It was nine years ago that the major leagues, frightened at the threat of the minors to discontinue the draft agreement which enabled the majors to procure experienced players for modest sums, tossed the yapping minor leaguers a bone in the form of their "hands-off" policy with respect to sandlotters.

They would leave the sandlots to the minor leagues as a source of supply to the minors, the majors agreed, following complaints that big league teams were outbidding the minors in the rush for raw material and thus strangling the smaller leagues. It is this agreement that is now plaguing the majors in the Feller case.

Cleveland's violation of the rule in signing the 17-year-old lad who blossomed as the new strikeout king of the majors in his first season of play is apparently clear-cut, but Landis is confronted now with conditions far different from those when the agreement was made.

At that time, few minor league teams were controlled by major clubs and thus defenseless in the matter of bidding for talent. But at the present writing rare is the minor league team that does not have a working agreement with a big league club or is not affiliated directly with a big league farm system. The protection the minor leagues sought and gained nine years ago is no longer essential.

Despite the fact that his $40,000 yearly salary is paid by the big leagues, Landis' rule over the entire organized baseball set-up has been strictly impartial. Many have been his rulings in favor of minor league clubs in cases of litigation against big leaguers and only last week he deprived Cincinnati of two valuable rookies on the grounds that they had been acquired irregularly.

But big league clubs who have their check books unfurled and ready to wave in Feller's direction at the moment when, and if, he is declared a free agent may yet be forced to restrain themselves. That kind of a decision by Landis would not necessarily place Feller on the big league market.

If Landis rules that the Cleveland club has, indeed, violated the agreement then, to be consistent, he must rule also that Feller still retains the status of a sandlotter and thus must play with a minor league club before he can be bought by the majors.

Thus the grand rush for Feller's services that would ensue would be between, not big league clubs, but between minor league clubs. Which, plainly, would be tough on Feller who is valued as high as $75,000 in big-league bidding but would hardly fetch one [illegible] in any bidding between minor league clubs.

The minor league club lucky enough to outbid the rest and obtain Feller's contract would be entitled to sell him to the big leagues after he has played one game in the minors, but anything that smacks of collusion between a big league team and the minor league club that bought Feller with big league money would certainly draw down the wrath of Landis all over again.

Low Miami Open Drills Make Picard, Guldahl, Shute Choices

By the Associated Press.

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 3.—Over the bunkers and around the doglegs the golfing profession wended sub-par ways in practice today, indicating the members who collect Col. Henry L. Doherty's $10,000 in the Miami Biltmore Open starting tomorrow will earn it.

The course is 6,640 yards long, traps are profuse and precipitous and par is 71, but Vic Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J., twirled it in 66 today, just like Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., did the day before. Both tied Ted Turner's competitive record for the layout. Ghezzi's outward 31 was a record, 4 under par.

Bob Stupple, of Chicago, took a 6 on the back-breaking eighteenth hole and still shot 70, and Ralph Guldahl, of St. Louis; Joe Turnesa, of Hartford; Pat Sawyer, of Minneapolis, and Les Madison, of Hollywood, Calif., scored pars.

The firing was so fancy, in fact, that the experts who dope the odds quoted the winner at 10 to 1 and take your pick among Guldahl, Picard and Denny Shute, who just won the P. G. A. championship at Pinehurst.

Next at 12 to 1 were quoted Tony Manero, Harry Cooper, Johnny Revolta and Horton Smith, who took the $2,500 first prize last year with 281, a tournament record.

The field, studded with most of the golfing notables, but lacking Walter Hagen, numbers 221, largest since the annual event was inaugurated in 1931.

It will be pruned after 36 holes to the low 75 pros and 10 amateurs, with ties. The defending amateur is Carl Dann, jr., of Orlando, Fla.

Eighteen holes will be played a day from Friday through Monday, with 40 leaders sharing the rich purse.

An additional $1,000 has been posted for the three pros from a single P. G. A. district who turn in the lowest aggregate score for this tournament and the British Colonial Open at Nassau next week.

Northwestern U. Alumni Here To Fete Post's All-High Team

The All-High football team selected by The Washington Post will be the guests of honor Friday, December 11, at the annual banquet of the Northwestern Alumni Association, Courtland D. Ferguson, president, announced last night.

High and prep school football coaches will also be guests of the Wildcat Grads when they hold their yearly assemblage at the American Association of University Women's clubrooms.

Among those extended invitations are Coach Elmer P. (Hap) Hardell, of Tech's interhigh champions; Coaches Dan Ahern, of Western; Hardy Pearce, of Central, Artie Boyd, of Eastern, and Herman Littman, of Roosevelt. The banquet kick-off is slated for 6:30 p. m.

The All-High players selected a week ago last Sunday by The Post call for the following scholastic stars to attend: Jim Farquharson, of Western, and Jim King, of Tech, ends; Phil Crabbe, of Western, and Hugh Cramer, of Central, tackles; Biff Oliphant, of Western, and Charlie Jones, of Central, guards; Bill Kemp, of Eastern, center; Al Kidwell, of Eastern, quarterback; Johnnie Williamson, of Tech, and Bill Wooten, of Central, halves, and Ben Weinstein, of Western, full.

Tinker, Once Star, Is Dying

Orlando, Fla., Dec. 3 (U.P.).—Joe Tinker, who made baseball history as a unit in the immortal "Tinker to Evers to Chance" double play combination, was believed dying tonight.

Physicians attending the one-time star of the big leagues said they did not expect him to live more than 24 hours.

Dodgers Sell Cards Bordagaray, 2 More

Leiber Likely To Be Sold To Cubs

Landis Is Still Mum on Feller-Free Agent Decision.

Multi-Player Trading by Terry, Grimm Comes to Dead End.

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer

Montreal, Dec. 3.—Major league slickers fought to a noisy 24-hour draw today in their old skin game of trying to get something for next to nothing.

Except for the sale by Brooklyn of Outfielder Stanley (Frenchy) Bordagaray, Infielder Jim Jordan and Emil Leonard, a right promising pitcher from Atlanta, to the St. Louis Cardinals, not a deal or swap of importance was revealed.

The closest approach to a big deal was made by the New York Giants and Chicago Cubs as the rival magnates held countless huddles and talked big talk.

With Manager Bill Terry on the scene about 48 hours late, the Giants offered to trade Catcher Gus Mancuso, Pitcher Hal Schumacher and Outfielder Hank Leiber to the Cubs for Outfielder Frank Demaree, Pitcher Bill Lee and Catcher Ken O'Dea. The Cubs, their outfielder supply aided by the purchase of young Joe Marty from San Francisco, offered Capt. Elwood English and Outfielder Tut Stainback in a flat swap for Leiber, but Terry balked. A deal was all but certain to be made, with Leiber going to the Cubs.

Dean Sale Hangs Fire.

The super spectacle, "the sale of Dizzy Dean," offered no new developments, with the Cincinnati Reds, New York Giants and Pittsburgh resting on their offers. It definitely was Branch Rickey's next move and the vice president of the Cardinals wasn't doing much moving.

No one was excited over the Brooklyn-Cardinals deal, the opinion being it merely completed last year's deal whereby the Dodgers obtained Outfielder Johnny Winsett from the Red Birds.

Both Bordagaray, who hit .315 for the Dodgers in 125 games, and Jordan, who batted .234 in 115 games last season, may ultimately be shipped to a Card farm. Leonard, however, will be given a real trial by the Cards, who are hard pressed for pitching talent.

As Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis sat in a hotel a few blocks away with the decision in the Bob Feller case under his hat, the minor leagues made a move to make scouting a more wide open business.

By unanimous vote, the minors voted to allow major or minor league representatives to recommend players for signing to other clubs.

Under the new ruling, which undoubtedly will be ratified by the majors next week, any scout can recommend a player to any club providing he files full information with Commissioner Landis and Judge W. G. Bramham, head of the minor league association. The ruling is not expected to have an effect on the Feller case, as it does not alter the status of the major-minor league agreement prohibiting major league clubs from signing sandlot players.

Commissioner Landis, parrying every request for his decision on the Feller case with a promise to each reporter that he wouldn't be scooped on the news, seemed a very lonely man as he lolled around his hotel room. All he would talk about was fishing, golf and the recent Presidential election. The only time he used the word "feller" was when he said:

"Any feller betting on an election is crazy."

Opinion Divided.

However, a big major league swing in sympathy with Cleveland was detected in the case. The word was out that should Landis declare Feller a free agent no fewer than 20 other major league players would be in good position to win free agencies.

Winning a free agency is a big goal of a good major league player inasmuch as he can offer himself to the highest bidder and pocket the cash himself. Lee Handley and John Peacock, lost to Cincinnati by a free agency ruling, made $18,000 between themselves by selling their services to Pittsburgh and the Boston Red Sox, respectively.

Opinion was evenly divided as to the possibilities of Landis' decision, half the club owners figuring Feller would go to Cleveland and the others guessing he'd be ruled a free agent.

Landis probably won't reveal his decision until after he has a chance for more talks with involved parties at the major league meetings next week.

Dental Student Gridder Ruins Foe's Teeth, Plate

Columbia, Mo., Dec. 3 (AP).—Clyde Nelson, University of Missouri end, will remember football games with Washington University of St. Louis, and especially Halfback Bob Hudgens, by the teeth he has lost.

In the 1935 game Nelson tackled Hudgens and came up minus several teeth. He had them replaced with a plate. This year when Missouri played Washington Nelson lost his plate on an identical play at the same end of the field with Hudgens again the object of tacklers.

Hoyas Choice Over Miami Tonight

Hagerty Plans to Use All Seniors on Squad in Final Game.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A Staff Correspondent.

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 3.—The carefree Georgetown football squad that entrained yesterday afternoon for Miami finally arrived in this Florida resort tonight, a cannonshot from the bustling Coney Island of the Southland, where it will play the University of Miami tomorrow night in the final game of the season.

The Hoyas' reception was quiet in contrast to those at other ports of call this season, but that is how Coach Jack Hagerty wanted it. There will be much celebrating and partying by the players, but not until after tomorrow's game is over. An official welcoming committee greeted the team and school representatives, but there was no band and no horn tooting of any kind—not even the chamber of commerce brand.

Immediately after being assigned to rooms at the Miami-Biltmore, where headquarters have been established, the players changed to football togs and were driven to Miami, about 10 miles away, for the usual light workout. The squad is in excellent condition and full strength will be available.

Tomorrow will mark the final appearance in Georgetown livery of five seniors, two of them regulars and the other important second-call men. Bill Duff, fullback and Al Vaccaro, tackle are the regulars playing their last game for the Blue and Gray. Ed Bodine and Joe Williams, needs and Mike Fuardo, center.

It is probable that all will appear in the starting line-up, a more or less sentimental gesture by Hagerty, but if advance reports of Miami are true the reserves will come out in a hurry. The regular line-up will have Snyder and Nee at ends, Vaccaro and Stralka, tackles; Hill and Tehaan, guards; Hardy, center; Moulin, quarterback; Keegin and Valliquette, halfbacks, and Duff fullback. Hagerty, however,

$400 Athletic Scholarships To Be Urged on Big Ten Today

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—A young professor of history will attempt to make history in the Western Conference tomorrow by pleading for adoption of a modified type of subsidy that would award scholarships to football players and other athletes on the basis of $400 a year.

Prof. Grant M. Hyde, secretary of a special faculty committee representing the University of Wisconsin, will present the so-called "Reynolds plan," which seeks to give athletes "equality of educational opportunity" who prove to be outstanding in both athletic and study tests.

It is the first the question of financially rewarding athletes has come out in the open in the "Big Ten."

The plan was devised by Prof. Robert L. Reynolds, also of the University of Wisconsin, who believes funds to administer the scholarships could be subscribed by the alumni and friends of the universities.

Summer School.

"We hope the Big Ten faculty committee will join us in a frank discussion of this problem," Prof. Reynolds said. "It is something that has to be brought out in the open sooner or later."

Briefly, this is what Wisconsin will request the "Big Ten" to adopt.

1. Establishment of a six-weeks' summer school course of academic work and sports into which Wisconsin prep school graduates of high scholastic and athletic attainments would be admitted without fee.

2. The summer school students to be graded on their work in classes and athletics, with those meeting specified requirements awarded scholarships of $400 a year.

3. As a requirement for continuing on the scholarship list for four years, students would have to maintain a class room average of more than 1.5 grade points per hour of credit during freshman and sophomore years.

4. Beneficiaries of the scholarships would not be required to compete in athletics during their

Dubois Elected Navy Football Captain

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 3.—Raymond F. Dubois, of Naugatuck, Conn., regular left guard characterized by Coach Tom Hamilton as "one of the greatest fighting linemen who ever played for the Navy," has been elected captain of the Naval Academy football team for next season.

In following the custom of electing a lineman as captain, the members of the team have simply shifted the captaincy across center, as Dubois succeeds Rivers J. Morrell, jr., of Los Angeles, Calif., who plays right guard.

Dubois has been a regular guard for two seasons and has also received his "N" for lacrosse and numerals for wrestling. He attended Phillips-Exter Academy before entering the Naval Academy, and played on its eleven.

Dubois is 21 years of age, weighs 185 pounds and is 5 feet 10 inches in height. The election of Marion H. Buaas, of Bakersfield, Calif., as manager, was also announced.

Dobie, Aid Given Chance to Recover

Boston, Dec. 3 (AP).—Gilmour (Gloomy Gil) Dobie, Boston College football coach, and Frank Murdock, freshman coach, critically injured in an automobile crash, tonight were given "good" chances to recover by their physician.

Dr. Thomas Wickham said they showed improvement—Dobie more than Murdock. The latter, he said, was still "groggy," having suffered fractured jaws and severe cuts and bruises.

4,829,000 Fans Jump Football Attendance, Gate Receipts 15% Over Season of 1935

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Attendance and gate receipts at college football games jumped approximately 15 per cent this season over last an Associated Press survey today revealed.

This was in line with the upward swing of 1935 when attendance soared 10 per cent over 1934.

Biggest gains this year were made in the South where incomplete returns indicated a 32 per cent gain. Accurate and complete information on representative Eastern and Midwest games showed an 18 per cent boost in the East and a 14 per cent leap in the Midwest.

The Far West attendance was up 6 and Southwest 5 per cent.

In these five sections the survey revealed that 4,829,000 persons attended 217 games played by major teams. Last year's figures showed that 4,056,000 saw 210 games.

Ohio State, beaten in three close games by Northwestern, Notre Dame and Pitt, played before nearly 283,000 in five home games to lead the country. California drew 251,000 in seven games, and Navy, leading the East, drew 246,000.

Minnesota attracted 244,700 fans to five home games and took second place in the Midwest.

Stiff Schedule, Strong Finish Made Panthers East's Best, Is Verdict

Writers' Poll, Voting Pitt Supreme in East, Swayed Decision; Panthers Beaten in 3 Previous Bowl Games; Choice Held 'No Reflection' on South.

By the Associated Press.

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 3.—Pittsburgh was selected today to play the University of Washington in the Rose Bowl football classic New Year's Day.

The decision was announced tonight at a dinner by Ray Eckmann, director of athletics at the University of Washington. He said:

"The Huskies and the football committee of the Pasadena Tournament of Roses encountered many problems in reaching the decision and made every effort to do a real job."

Beaten Three Times.

The Panthers have come to Pasadena for the annual New Year's Day game on three previous occasions.

They lost to Stanford, 7 to 6, in 1928; were defeated by Southern California, 47 to 14, in 1930, and were again beaten by the Trojans in 1933, 35 to 0.

In the 1936 season, they reached smashing heights in a 26-to-0 victory over Notre Dame's Fighting Irish, and a 19-to-6 triumph over the powerful Cornhuskers of Nebraska. Their record was tarnished by an upset defeat at the hands of Duquesne, 7 to 0, and a tie with Fordham, 0 to 0.

Chairman C. Hal Reynolds and members of the Pasadena football committee expressed themselves pleased with the selection.

Representative Team.

Eckmann released this prepared statement:

"We of the University of Washington, speaking for the West in Pasadena's Rose Bowl classic, take extreme pleasure in announcing that the University of Pittsburgh football team has been selected as the opponent for New Year's Day, 1937, and has this afternoon accepted the invitation to participate.

"Our intent has been to choose the team which is representative of the best in Eastern football. Although many sections have turned out splendid teams this year, any one of which might have made an acceptable opponent, yet the unusually strong schedule which confronted Pittsburgh and the outstanding record it made, ending the season with a definite display of superiority, makes it the logical opponent to represent the East in this game.

"The further fact that this week ten of New York City's sports writers chose Pittsburgh as the winner

Danno Defeats Garibaldi On Foul

Gino Garibaldi, the tough Italian, registered a kick at Turner's Arena last night—a kick in the middle of the stomach of Danno O'Mahoney, the Oirish Gossoon, which cost Gino his wrestling match on a disqualification.

A near-capacity crowd of 1,800 witnessed the proceedings. The boys violated the union rules by working overtime and almost transgressed the regulations of the League of Nations by working just one minute short of one hour in the engagement.

The encounter was rather devoid of excitement, being almost as devoid of histrionics as a burlesque queen's version of Camille. It reached its highlight on the numerous occasions when O'Mahoney attempted to apply his famous Irish Whip, only to have Gino nullify his efforts by the simple expedient of squatting and digging his head in the canvas while Danno vainly tugged and tugged.

All a Deep Mystery.

Just why Garibaldi should have been disqualified at the precise moment when he was thumbed out of the ring by Referee Benny Bortnick is one of life's little mysteries—unless one thinks that the whole business was for the purpose of creating popular demand for a return match.

Gino had been belting Danno around with monotonous regularity throughout the 59 minutes the contest lasted, and he had kicked the Irish former heavyweight champion around like a football without being tossed out.

The finish came about when O'Mahoney finally was able to apply his Irish whip, snapping Garibaldi to the canvas once before Gino finally grabbed a rope and refused to budge. As Danno tugged and tugged, Gino let loose with a kick to the tummy, which sent O'Mahoney to the mat. The Irisher rose, only to be kicked again—this time out of the ring.

Referee Bortnick experienced considerable difficulty keeping Garibaldi away from O'Mahoney while Danno was attempting to clamber back in the ring.

Credulous Wins Charles Town Feature as Foul Marks Race

Chief Hollis Disqualified In Fourth

Loses 2d Money After Causing Jam; Jockey Garrett Set Down.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., Race Track, Dec. 3.—The first disqualification of the meeting developed in the running of the Senator Beacom purse, feature race of today's program here in Jefferson County. The ruling did not affect the winner, Credulous, but saw Chief Hollis lifted out of second money, Sun Sweep, the fouled horse, was moved into the place position with the well backed Ironbound, squeezing into the pay-off.

Jockey Leon Garrett, who had the mount on Chief Hollis was suspended for five days for rough riding in the race. It was his mount which caused most of the trouble. Chief Hollis on the outside of Sun Sweep caused the latter to swerve into Credulous and Jockey F. M. Smith on the former was forced to stand up in the stirrups. As if that was not enough, Chief Hollis then bumped Sun Sweep.

It is doubtful if Sun Sweep could have won with clear sailing. Credulous, once free, opened a good lead and was right in front at the end although Jockey Machado rode out his mount needlessly. Chief Hollis was always second and Sun Sweep was always third.

Credulous failed to run out as was his habit on the mile tracks and he paid a $7.20 mutuel.

A pair of aces, Nos. 1 and 1, brought $18.40 to those who cashed the daily double.

Despite the fact that the track was all the "sea of mud" rating implies, the weather was the most comfortable of the meeting and both attendance and betting were average for a week day.

Mint Bud Easy Winner.

Mint Bud, a daughter of the mud-loving Bud Lerner, ran away with the first race. Urged by W. Snyder, Mint Bud opened a good lead at once and bounded through the slop to win by five lengths over Canteret. Radial was third virtually throughout. The winner had a good backing at an $11.80 mutuel.

Sundrops, at a $6.80 mutuel, overcame poor racing luck to take a nose decision from Gay Lass. Sundrops went to the outside fence at the turn, but came with excellent courage in the stretch to outgame her rival. Third money went to Sandbroom in the field of eight.

They chased Hard Chase in the third race. The daughter of Purchase was nicely handled by Jockey Johnny Shanks, taking a good lead and being rated to the stretch where she drew out from Heartease. Sea Finn was third. The winner paid $6.60.

Shanks Has Triple.

Jockey Johnny Shanks and Mrs. J. H. Elliott scored a "double" the afternoon when Idle Worker led from the flag fall to finish in the running of the Harrison purse, the fifth race. The Strolling Player gelding defeated Petee Lad, one that closed briskly by three lengths with Bromide third. The winner paid a $7.60 mutuel.

Queen Nadi, at a $91.80 mutuel paid the longest price of the meeting in the sixth race, winning by five lengths from Channing with Mad Dash third. Queen Nadi ran Mad Dash into defeat and bounded away. Jockey F. Cusimano, a Washington boy, rode the winner.

Jockey Johnny Shanks completed a triple, when he won the last race with Irish Vote at a $9.40 mutuel.

MINT BUD, at home in the going, and first away, opened a good lead while shaking off CANTERET and was taken in hand through the final eighth. CANTERET, closest to the pace from the beginning, was hard ridden and was easily second. RADIAL went up on the outside at the break, but could not better position. CURRANTS was away poorly and gained during the late stages. ARBRANCH could not threaten. HYDRO GIRL dropped back after three eighths. The others were outrun. BY SURPRISE pulled up lame.

SUNDROPS ran out at the first and final turns and, after being within striking distance from the beginning, withstood a drive to be up in the concluding strides. GAY LASS worked her way to the leaders along the back stretch, disposed of STINGAREE to take command, but could not resist the winner. SAND BROOM went to the top in the stretch, but was tiring at the end. MARGIE LOU stumbled while forwardly placed and came willingly after regaining stride. STINGAREE stopped.

HARD CHASE sprinted to the front at once, opened good lead, was given a slight breather entering the stretch and easily held sway to the end. HEARTEASE went up on the outside to threaten avenging for the stretch, but could not menace the winner in the stretch. SEA FINN, closest to HARD CHASE in the early running, closed willingly. CHRISTINE ADEE showed a good effort. ROQUEPINE was squeezed back soon after the break. BANANA, fractious at the post, went in the air at the break.

IDLE WORKER, sent to the top in the opening sixteenth while under hustling tactics, was rated along in front and easily kept command to the end. PETEE LAD came with a belated rush in the final eighth and was going fastest at the end. BROMIDE, unable to get to the front, was hard ridden and was tiring at the end. STEPEE saved ground and closed willingly. DARLING PAT ran out at the final turn after being a keen forward factor. The others could not reach contention.

QUEEN NADI, rated along while close to the pace of MAD DASH, rallied when placed to a drive and drew out to win easily. CHANNING improved his position gradually leaving the backstretch and closed willingly, but no match for the winner. MAD DASH set the pace under stout riding to the stretch and was stopping at the end. RHYTHMICAL closed some ground from a slow beginning. BENGAY was squeezed back leaving the gate. EBON ZE was away in a tangle and quit after running forwardly. POVEL was not a factor.

Charles Town Race Track, Dec. 3.

Dear Al:

The population of horse heaven was increased by one last night when Rollicker, a chestnut gelding that ran good races at Bowie, died here after an attack of intestinal influenza. The son of St. Brideaux was owned by G. Mohr. Norman Snow, of the Racing Form staff, and May E. Van, of Lynbrook, N. Y., decided that two could play the races as cheap as one and were married here last Tuesday night. When Claude Feltner was track superintendent here he was not happy unless he was standing in the middle of the track. Now he is devoting his full time to training and must get close to the horses, so he rides around the track each morning leading his charges in their workouts. I'm sorry that I did not receive the letter signed "Old Lady" until today and it grieves me. She asked me to use a certain phrase in writing about any horse that I liked particularly well last Friday at Bowie. What makes me sad is that I used the phrase on a horse that I was not sure would be even trying. If she sees this, and remembers the signal, I shall do my best to give her one that will make amends. One of the paddock wise-crackers came up with one today that is worth passing along. He said that a load of sponges was shipped here and the gelding Khelaboo ate them.

BILL.

First race—Douglas F. first on the also eligible list is a good mudder and appears to have this race at his mercy if he sees action. Spear and Take Off will be at home on the off course and promises to fight it out for the chief award if the top one is idle.

Second race—Justa Play, victim of a bungling ride last out, will be a threat with a change of riders. Twidgets has been getting nothing on fast tracks, but will be at home in the going tomorrow. Tell It has speed and is dangerous.

Third race—All age maidens clash here and anything can happen, and probably will happen. Your guess is as good as mine. I'll take Sumac, Shindig and Westigal.

Fourth race—Black Chief turned in a good race here the other day, having some trouble along the rail, at the far turn. Is suited by the route and I'm going to take my chances. Berry Patch is a bear for mud and appears to be the one to beat. Black Sweep and Chilly Ebbie hold some chance.

Fifth race—The Christmas Special pits Rough Party against Aroused and Headin Home. If the former draws a change of riders, he will be hard to beat. Icy Wind won his last and may upset the best of plans.

Sixth race—Chatterdoo favors the track and may make every post a winning one in this cheap company. Mince ran some good races on the big time and is a threat. Keeswick for the show end.

Seventh race—Eddie Wrack, bred for mud, will be a hard one to beat here. Hoursend, winner of the seventh yesterday, is far down the list and would bear watching if sent postward. Lucid's last was fair.

Eighth race—(Substitute)—Bubbling Springs, Single A, and Miss Patches is the way I prefer them.

Best bet—Eddie Wrack.

Board Votes Innovation In Policy

Game Will Be Tried as 'Experiment;' Series Now Unprofitable.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Night basketball, an innovation in high school sports in Washington, will be on the inter-high series program this season, it was learned by The Post yesterday.

The board of principals had agreed to "experiment" with the night game plan on Friday, January 15, in the Tech High gymnasium, but has had to change the date of the nocturnal contests to the preceding or following week, Proms being held by several schools on January 15 necessitated the change, but the night game will definitely be held.

Oddly enough, however, the action of the principals, though opening an avenue to night interhigh games, comes as a decided blow to more ambitious plans of the Inter-high Athletic Council, it was revealed.

Veto Four Night Games.

The council had submitted a plan to the principals calling for at least four night games at Tech. The council also suggested that the night games be run as double headers, thereby abolishing the "split" policy of holding one game at Tech and one at Roosevelt in the afternoon.

Through the night game idea, the council was attempting to inject new life into an interhigh series in which the interest has become deadened since the "split" policy was inaugurated. The council believes financial necessity is one important factor, and also the right of parents and fans, occupied by business during the day, to see the interhigh games.

Supervisor Bayh describes acute need of finances by his department to carry on its intramural program of sports and physical education and had expected the night-game plan, and at least the double-headers, to put basketball back on a firm financial footing. Under the action taken by the principals, the series will be held in the same lamentable fashion it was last year with the exception of the one "experimental" game.

Even should the latter prove successful, it would be too late by mid-January to secure the gymnasium for other night games.

Series "On Losing Basis."

Supervisor Bayh declared that "we've got to have a change in policy, if we expect to expand our program and make our own way. We've got to have a sound financial policy. We can't afford to continue on a losing basis in basketball."

One of the chief critics of the "split" policy which schedules one game at Roosevelt and one at Tech on the same day, is John Paul Collins, former president of the Interhigh Athletic Association, who suggested it be tried for only one year.

Collins declares the policy showed itself a failure and has vigorously approved a return to the double-header plan. The latter established interhigh basketball on its most enthusiastic and profitable basis. Night basketball, played by high schools in virtually every other section of the country, has flourished for decades.

The interhigh schedule, including Wilson High, follows. For the first time, six schools will compete in an interhigh series.

Maj. John L. Griffith, commissioner of athletics in the Western Conference, said tonight the measure undoubtedly would be defeated, basing his prediction on the present line-up of faculty advisers and athletic directors. Strangely enough, no member of the Badger athletic department had anything to do with the Reynolds plan. Harry Stuhldreher, director of athletics, and his aids are staying completely out of the situation.

The directors of athletics will ratify the fooball schedules for 1937 and the coaches of other sports will draft schedules for the coming year.

Pittsburgh Gets Rose Bowl Game of the Lambert Memorial Trophy, emblematic of Eastern football supremacy, has confirmed our judgment.

"America is thus assured of two of its representative teams—Pittsburgh for the East, Washington for the West—playing what is certain to be one of the season's greatest grid contests on January 1, carrying on in a splendid manner the traditions of the Rose Bowl."

Eckmann said the Washington coach, Jimmy Phelan, had been apprised of the selection of Pittsburgh this afternoon and expressed "great pleasure."

"We believe we're going to bring a mighty tough football team from the East in Pittsburgh," the Washington official said.

He declined to give further reasons for selection of Pittsburgh rather than Alabama or Louisiana State University, each of which finished its season undefeated and tied once.

He did say, however, that the choice of the Panthers was "no reflection on Southern football because we all know the great teams they produce down there." Eckmann said the fact that Southern elevnes had predominated in the Rose Bowl the last few years was not a factor in the decision.

Penn Coach Guest of Friends School Team

Coach Harvey Harman, whose University of Pennsylvania team this year compiled the best record of any Penn team in a decade, illustrates forward-passing technique to Charles Warren, jr. (left), captain of the Friends School varsity and Robert Fergus, 12, captain of the Midget team. Harman was the honor guest at the annual football banquet here last night.

Penn Coach Hits Interference On Passes

Friends School Gridmen Hear Harman Say Rule Ought to Go.

Another objector to the rule on pass interference loomed up for the football rules committee here last night in the husky person of Harvey J. Harman, the former Pittsburgh All-American tackle, now head coach at Pennsylvania.

Harman, an ex-Latin teacher and son of a Lutheran minister, expressed himself before 200 banqueters at the Friends School football banquet as favoring a return to the old rule "which allowed the passing team to take out those defensive halfbacks." If the rules committee doesn't favor it, he said, the penalty should at least be lessened to a 15-yard penalty.

Coach Harman also said he is "strongly in favor of Pennsylvania entering the contemplated Ivy League" of Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Columbia, Cornell, Pennsylvania and Dartmouth.

The coach showed complete, slow-motion pictures of the Navy-Pennsylvania game which Penn won, 16-6. The movies showed beyond a shadow of a doubt that Navy's touchdown was the result of a lapse of eyesight on the part of an official. Bob Antrim caught a pass from Snead Schmidt on the 5-yard line and stepped over the sideline for at least two steps before going over the goal line.

Gevinson to Fight Again Next Monday

Lou Gevinson, former District amateur featherweight champion, who made an auspicious professional debut by knocking out Al Schaeffer here last week, will work again at Turner's Arena next Monday night.

Gevinson will oppose Lou Lombardi, of Baltimore, in a special six-round preliminary to a card which will be headed by two eight-round contests.

In one of the cofeatured bouts, Bob Wilson will return to the scene of his former triumphs against Jimmy Jones, one of Baltimore's leading welterweight prospects.

In the other half of the twin headline card, Ben Brown will oppose Tommy Beck, a Jacksonville light-heavyweight.

In another six-round preliminary, Sam Bacala, who is on the way to becoming a local favorite, will oppose Stan Carrier, a local welterweight. Two four-round bouts, to be announced, will complete the card.

Announcement of the 1937 date was made at West Point, where it was explained the official announcement of the site for the game would be forthcoming after a conference of Army and Navy officials in a few days.

Hoyas Favored Over Miami Tonight

Miami completed preparations for the game with a long offensive workout this afternoon under a torrid sun. It is exeremely warm tonight, especially for boys accustomed to the wintry blasts of Washington, and the weather is expected to have an important bearing on the outcome of the game.

Miami is going into battle in the role of the underdog, but Georgetown, with one eye cocked inquisitively on Mississippi's 14-0 victory over the Hurricanes last week, isn't assuming a superiority complex. The Hoyas are in for 60 minutes of the hardest football they've played this season and know it, even if they don't show it.

Rose Bowlers Near Lead in D. C. League

Defeat Brewers in Two Games as Harrison Rolls .394 Set.

The Rose Liquor Store's strong duckpin aggregation topped the league-leading Washington Brewers in two games last night at the Northeast Temple alleys and pulled up to within one game of the Brewers in the battle for the leadership of the District League.

The Liquor team has been affording the Brewers its stiffest opposition, having beaten them at each encounter. Joe Harrison and Johnny Anderson featured the victory, the former shooting a 394 set and the latter a 151 game. Gene Hargett's 148 was the Brewers best effort.

Arcadia's "team of destiny" provided the big upset of the night, taking Heurichs for three games with its first 1,800 set of the year.

Occidental replaced Heurich in the No. 3 position when they knocked off Lucky Strike three games with Bill Krauss chipping in a 407 set and Astor Clarke, 402. Convention Hall went into the win column with two wins over Georgetown, aided by Joe Pricci's 143 game and 361 set. "Flick" Hurd gave the West-enders the final game, rolling a timely 140 score.

Hertz Drivurself picked a tough opponent when it scheduled its home and home match with the Winchester Health Center Club. The Southern aggregation, with a recognized world record team game of 744 under their belts, gained a 39-pin advantage over the local team two weeks ago at Winchester and will carry this lead into the second five games of the match, which will be rolled tonight at 7:30 o'clock at the Georgetown alleys.

The heavy pin-spilling of "Kip" Kettler did not stop the leading Daily News team from taking the odd game from New Center Market in the Daylight League at Convention Hall. Kettler annaxed top scoring honors with a 142 game and 369 set. The Washington Post team retained the runner-up position by an odd-game decision over City Postoffice.

The American Legion pinmen went on a scoring spree last night at the Lucky Strike drives and at the conclusion of activities three new season records passed the boards.

Howard E. Ludwig, of Jasper Post, chalked up the first mark with a 151 game, Fort Stevens rolled a 621 game for the second and the leading Nash Post team clapped the lead on the finale with a total pinfall of 1,771, to increase its lead with a clean sweep over Lincoln.

Bess Smith featured the activities in the Ladies Procurement League, shooting a 116 game to aid Empire's two wins over the Queenies. The Colonials pulled up on even terms with the Pinnettes with two victories over the Madcaps . . . Norman Groth's 152 game enabled the leading Daily News team in taking two from Jalepes Delicatessen in the National Capital League.

Margaret Winchester North) and Jesse Keith (Columbia) shared individual honors in the C. & P. Ladies Telephone League, the former taking high game laurels with 117 and the latter rolling a 298 set. The best team efforts were North's 491 and General Office's 1,358 . . . Beall's 146 game and Penfold's 357 set led the list of individual efforts in the War Department League.

Standing Team Recommended By Local Women's Golf Body

By Dave Herman.

A recommendation that the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association be represented next season by a standing team of 10 or 12 players, instead of the customary hand-picked team, was made yesterday at the annual election and meeting at Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

Launched by Miss Susan Hacker, of Chevy Chase, intercity first team captain, the proposal seemed to meet with the unqualified approval of all association officers and club delegates in attendance.

"A team of 20 or 25 drawn from 100 players on the basis of their handicaps is unwieldy," Miss Hacker declared. "I feel sure that a smaller team, with all places challengable, would strike a more popular chord."

Miss Hacker's suggestion was one of the highlights of the business meeting. She also made it known that the high handicap players would have their fling in intercity matches next season, with matches to be arranged with Winchester, Charlottesville and other Virginia teams.

Mrs. Ralph W. Payne, of Congressional Country Club, was inducted into office as president for a second term, after praising the officers and committee women who worked with her during the past season.

Elected on the same ticket with her were Mrs. Roy Miller, of Kenwood, first vice president; Mrs. J. W. Beller, of Columbia, second vice president; Mrs. W. R. Woodward, of Army and Navy, secretary, and Mrs. Theodore W. Peyser, of Woodmont, treasurer.

Reports were made by the following: Mrs. N. J. Waldron, Beaver Dam district, first team captain; Mrs. E. A. Rule, of Kenwood, second team captain; Mrs. Algie S. Gardiner, of Columbia, chairman of nominating committee; Mrs. C. P. Medley, of Manor, handicap chairman; Mrs. R. E. Burks, of Manor, year book; Mrs. H. L. Simcoe, prize committee chairman.

Mrs. Waldron, in her report, brought out the fact that efforts are being made to have the first, second and third team matches played on one course instead of on three separate fronts, as was the case this past season.

She recommended that a player, in order to be eligible for one of these teams must turn in five 1936 scores.

A. A. U. Struggle For Control Is Seen Today

Election of Mahoney, Anti-Brundage Faction's Man, Predicted.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 3.—Despite attempts to administer soothing syrup to belligerently minded delegates by Avery Brundage, of Chicago, and Jeremiah T. Mahoney, of New York, leaders of the two factions which split over Olympic issues, indications tonight pointed to a wide struggle for control of the Amateur Athletic Union, chief sports-governing body in the United States.

On the eve of the annual A. A. U. convention, which starts tomorrow with committee sessions, opposing lines were drawn almost as sharply as a year ago in New York. There, forces seeking to keep America out of the Olympic games at Berlin, on anti-Nazi grounds, were beaten by a narrow margin.

Meantime the balance of power appears to have swung over to the anti-Olympic group, which has rallied behind the candidacy of Mahoney for president and claims to have corralled sufficient delegates to take complete charge of the proceedings.

Streamliner Called Symbol Of Rail Revival

Downs Cites Economies Made Possible by Heavier Traffic.

By the Associated Press.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 3 (AP).—A picture of American railroads emerging from depression with a new and modernized appeal was presented to the Investment Bankers Association of America in convention today by L. A. Downs, president of the Illinois Central system. Downs said the carriers, in a surge to head the recovery parade in transportation, have made "as modern as a streamliner" the latest American figure of speech.

Talking in a railroad forum, Downs declared the industry has opened the way for further operating economies by adopting modern methods of mass production, a matter of prime interest to investment bankers who have seen many millions of dollars in rail securities go into default and then a definite turn for the better the last year.

"In 1921," he noted, "the operating cost of moving a ton of freight a thousand miles was $10.78; in 1929 it was $7.44. With the decline in traffic volume since 1929, it might be expected that the unit cost would increase. Instead it was further reduced to $6.63 in 1935. 'Considering permanent economies which will continue, the unit cost will certainly be further reduced with increased volume."

Spirit of Recovery.

More than 20 streamlined trains on a dozen railroads, he said, symbolized the new spirit of the carriers in a recovery bid for favor of the traveling public.

The bankers found glad tidings in a report of the association's committee on industrial securities, headed by Sidney J. Weinberg, of Goldman, Sachs and Co., New York.

"This has been a year of great improvement in the industrials securities business," the report stated. "The outlook for the future is cheerful."

The report warned that increasing demand and declining return on best-grade issues raised a danger of creating "a synthetic interest in securities promising higher yields, but lacking investment merit."

Private Building At Four-Year High

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Swelled by the highest private awards in more than four years, engineering construction awards rose to the second highest weekly volume this year, Engineering News-Record reported today.

For the week ended Tuesday the total was $74,328,000 compared with $49,345,000 in the same week last year. The record for 1936 was $102,534,000 in the week ended January 9. Private awards were $38,517,000, compared with $11,577,000 a year ago. Public contracts totaled $35,811,000, compared with $37,768,000 last year.

U. S. Gold Stocks Set New Record

By the Associated Press.

The closely watched barometer of credit expansion possibilities—excess bank reserves—remained unchanged during the week ended December 2.

In its weekly condition statement of Federal Reserve Banks, the Federal Reserve Board today estimated excess of reserves of member institutions at $2,210,000,000 for the week. The leveling off of excess reserves followed a $60,000,000 decline in the previous week.

Reflecting seasonal demands for money by business and commerce, the board reported a $37,000,000 increase in money in circulation during the week ended December 2 to $6,466,000,000, or $623,000,000 over the same week a year ago.

This withdrawal was offset in part by a $26,000,000 increase in monetary gold stock, sending holdings to another new high of $11,188,000,000, or $1,179,000,000 over the same date last year.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Most Groups Rally With Steels and Equipments Leading; Wheat Higher.

New York, Dec. 3.—All around improvement in securities markets took place without much change in trading volume. Government bonds revived from their recent sinking spell, and the familiar irregularity in stocks gave way to general gains, some of them from 1 to 2 points. Underlying influences in the market were little changed, except perhaps for less nervousness in the London markets. The current of money movements was sluggish and dollars were slightly higher against sterling and francs. Grain prices bounded forward to new high prices for the season, December closing up 1 to 1⅛ points.

In lieu of any startling developments on the Spanish war front or of other than the routine reports of increased dividends and wages, or of strike threats, for corporations, the markets talked mostly about the worries of Great Britain over its King. While it is recognized that some temporary unsettlement in security markets here, in sympathy with the London market, might follow, it is difficult to see how any permanent harm could result, no matter which way the cat jumps.

Meanwhile the stock market continued to shift uncertainly in response to individual activities based on a variety of causes. The eternal question of whether prices have properly discounted the current rate of corporation earnings and its twin, the prospect for improvement or decline in business, governed a certain amount of buying and selling. No doubt if all were serene in Europe much more confidence would come into the markets, but other factors are important. In professional circles the feeling is strong that, merely because stocks have gone up so far and for so long a time, a setback is logical. The greater portion of the public perhaps is more inclined to regard the current favorable statistics on business as promising a further rise in prices.

Income Taxes.

Comparative stagnation or actual weakness in the price of standard industrial securities suggests no great amount of fresh investment from important sources, and on the other hand the income tax and the lack of other suitable investment are operating against large-scale liquidation. So far as the extra and special dividends are concerned, they do not seem to be much of a bullish factor any longer except in the case of preferred stocks with large arrears.

Public preference for stocks selling at only a few dollars a share because it can "afford" to buy them, still is being exercised. A favorite for a while today was Armour, which had an excuse for hardening in the news that another bond refunding operation was about to be undertaken. Many of the other low-priced issues were bought, but as a class their activity was lost in the recovery of the standard industrials, particularly the steels and railroad equipments.

Rather belatedly, the market seemed to realize that the year is ending with the steel industry not only operating at an unusually high level—not far from actual capacity—but that operations are tending to rise. The old cry doubtless will be raised, namely, that some of next quarter's business is being borrowed, but the prospect is for enough to go around. That is true largely because of the years of under-maintenance by the railroads and the backed-up need for improvements in the public utility field, to say nothing of building construction.

Plus ca Change . . .

The old saying, "Scratch a Russian and find a Tartar," applies to the performance yesterday of the New York Stock Exchange in abitrarily stopping its ticker reporting service at 3 o'clock for 16 minutes. At 3 o'clock trading ends, and consequently the members—at least the floor members—have no terribly pressing interest to look after until 10 o'clock the next morning. However, the real day is just beginning for many others. It requires another ten minutes ordinarily for the ticker to complete the reports on actual trades, after which it begins printing the closing bid and asked prices. Until the complete record of the day's trading is at hand, the public interested in the market has to wait. For many thousands who depend on afternoon newspapers for the complete stock tables, a few minutes delay means many hours delay, as train connections won't wait on the pleasure of the stock exchange. The display of indifference to the public interest shown yesterday makes the public wonder if much change beneath the surface has taken place in the relations of the exchange with the public. To many the affair must have made the exchange look to be the same old Oriental potentate, notwithstanding the recent work of a rejuvenated public relations department and the shadow of the SEC.

Excess Reserves.

The outlook is for no further increase in excess reserves this week, despite large Treasury transactions which tend to increase them. The Treasury itself reduced excess funds yesterday by taking out of the money market through a Treasury bill issue $50,000,000 more than was raised to meet a maturing bill issue. Excess reserves for the country as a whole are now running around $2,200,000,000, and for this city the total is around $760,000,000.

Sinking Fund Sunk.

One of the reasons why the Treasury's position, on paper, looks better than it did a year ago is that general expenditure does not include any substantial retirement of debt for sinking fund account. For the period July 1 through November 28 the Treasury has redeemed for sinking fund account only $38,165,000, compared with $301,368,000 in the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year. If the Treasury can fall behind in executing the statutory sinking fund requirements for an indefinite period the budget appropriation of over $500,000,000 a year for debt retirement will mean nothing at all. The sinking fund has little practical significance anyway so long as the Treasury is running with a deficit and adding to the public debt.

Steel Employment Higher Than 1929

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Employment in the steel industry in October was 15 per cent above that for October, 1929, and payrolls aggregated upward of $1,000,000 more than the 1929 average, the American Iron & Steel Institute reported today.

The 5,000 workers added to the industry in October brought the total number employed to 531,400. Hourly wages averaged 66.3 cents and it was expected that the general wage increases granted November 16 would increase the average hourly pay to 73 cents. Wage earners worked an average of 42.5 hours a week, compared with 40.5 hours in September and 55 hours in October, 1929. October, 1936, steel payrolls totalled $71,110,000.

Regular $5 Dividend Also Declared, Making $12 for This Year.

By Thomas M. Cahill

Directors of the Bank of Commerce & Savings have declared a regular dividend of $5 a share and a special dividend of $2 a share, both payable January 1, 1937, to stockholders of record December 20, 1936, according to an announcement made this week by Thomas J. Groom, executive vice president and cashier of the bank. The declaration of these dividends makes a total of $12 a share declared by the bank during 1936. In addition to the dividend declaration, the directors voted a half month's salary to officers and employes.

Commenting on the action of the board in increasing the dividend and voting the bonus, officials of the bank said it was completing the most successful year in its history; that deposits had reached an all-time high and earnings were the best the bank had experienced. They reported further that a substantial sum had been transferred to surplus during the year and that this item was now twice as large as capital.

The Bank of Commerce & Savings was established in 1907. Its main office is located at Seventh and E streets northwest. There is a branch at H and North Capitol streetz, which was opened two years ago.

On the Air Today

A day or two ago, Mr. John E. Logan, of Portsmouth, Va., wrote to say he had seen the "Good Will Court" given a high rating in some "poll" and asked what the poll might be and how the ratings are arrived at.

The broadcast industry usually stands on ratings obtained by a business concern which samples the entire country on network program popularity. These reports, named after the company which makes them, are known as "Crossley ratings."

Although the methods used by such companies vary, the ordinary procedure is to check a given number of listeners in any one community by telephone. The interest chiefly centers first in the number of persons reporting they are listening at the time the calls are made, and second, in the name of the program being heard if the set in the home is turned on.

By such sampling methods, irrespective of the particular one used, a pretty accurate line can be obtained on the relative popularity of major programs.

The race stacks up as follows at the present time, these ratings coming from the most recent Crossley reports:

The Benny show tops all others; Maj. Bowes, second. Eddie Cantor is second in the half-hour program division; Burns and Allen, third; Phil Baker (with a limited network), fourth. In the full hour division, "Good Will Court" is third; "Hollywood Hotel," fourth, and next in order, "Radio Theater." Bing Crosby, Rudy Valee and Fred Astaire.

Maybe you do not agree with these Nation-wide ratings. Whether or not, do not fail to see the radio page of The Washington Post next Sunday. Washington listeners will have an opportunity, through a "program preference" poll form, to vote for their favorites. Such a poll was taken in the summer of 1935 and "One Man's Family" was by far the most popular program at that time.

The poll opening next Sunday will run for four weeks. Be sure to clip the form and register your preferences.

Features today:

"Radio Guild"—Presents first of four Christmas plays, "The Inspector General," by Nicholas Gogol, WMAL, at 4.

Amos 'n' Andy—Present the first of a series of weekly minstrel shows, WRC, at 7. This represents one of a few departures in the Correll-Gosden series in the many years it has been on the air.

Contrasts—Maestro Kostelanetz and orchestra play "Dardanella" and "Runnin' Wild," early jazz tunes, and the brand new "I Was Saying to the Moon," from Mae West's new picture, WJSV, at 8:30.

Claudette Colbert—Re-enacts dramatic scenes from her new picture, "Maid of Salem," in "Hollywood Hotel," WJSV, at 9.

Jack Pearl—Guests with "Court of Honor," WMAL, at 10. Also Louise Massey and the Westerners. Benay Venuta sings "In the Midst of a Dream."

Senator Wagner—Speaks on "Social Security in Action," WJSV, at 11:15.

Lucille Manners, who follows Jessica Dragonette into that big Friday-night-at-8 show at WRC, has just been signed for a leading role in the new Broadway production, "Rising Star," which goes into rehearsal this week . . . Jimmy Scribner's popular "Johnson Family" has come to WOL via the Mutual net, Mondays through Fridays, at 5:15. Scribner writes the script and presents the entire sketch. He singlehandedly does 22 characters . . . The fan magazine, Radio Guide, in the current issue, gives much space to the trials and troubles besetting "Good Will Court." Example: Judge Sweedler, of Brooklyn, has sued everyone connected with the show for $250,000 for illegal use of the name itself.

Abundant Life Aim Of Italy, Says Envoy

By the Associated Press.

Fulvio Sulvich, new Italian Ambassador, said yesterday that Italy, like the United States, was striving for a "more abundant life."

Discussing Italy's fascism at a National Press Club luncheon, he described the social insurance system Premier Mussolini has insituted and the "after work" institution to give working men "something out of life."

He added:

"The social policy of the regime has been accompanied, so as to also relieve unemployment, by large public works, such as modernizing of the highways, electrification of railroads, slum clearance in big cities, reclamation of entire regions, hitherto abandoned, by means of irrigation, aqueducts and soil improvement.

"Italy can also claim to have effected, first among European nations, a vast scheme of rural resettlement shifting large numbers of farmers from unproductive areas to better lands."

2 Are Convicted In Stock Rigging

Pittsburgh, Dec. 3 (AP).—A Federal Court jury deliberated five hours today, then brought in two convictions under "anti-stock rigging" sections of the securities exchange act.

Government officials described the convictions as of national importance, asserting the "anti-stock rigging" section of the act has been bitterly opposed since its enactment in 1934.

The jury found Melvin S. Patterson and W. Homer Porter guilty of participating with Robert B. Vaughan in the manipulation of five gold mining companies. A directed verdict of acquittal had been ordered for a fourth defendant, E. M. Garwood.

SEC Witness Aims Blow at Cameraman

Angered by a photographer snapping his picture while he was a witness before the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday, E. E. MacCrone, Detroit broker, struck at the photographer, futiley, however, and then appealed to the commission against what he said was an invasion of his privacy.

The hearing, one of a series to determine the type of Federal investment trust regulation to be recommended by the commission to the next Congress, also was featured by the far-reaching suggestions for Government control from an investment trust officer, J. B. Lovelace, president of the Investment Company of America.

MacCrone was sitting with James Austin, an SEC attorney, when the photographer tried to get his picture. He protested. The photographer backed away and MacCrone followed, swinging at him. The blow missed, grazing the cameraman, who offered no resistance, but shot the picture before he backed away.

Jurors Indict WPA Employe In Theft Case

Bill Also Voted Against Knife-Wielder Held in Fatal Stabbing.

Herman C. Davis, 34-year-old nighttime employe of the Works Progress Administration, was indicted by the District grand jury yesterday on a charge of stealing ten electric adding machines from the Tempo Building, Nineteenth and D streets northwest, where he was employed.

Police charged Davis lowered the machines to the ground from an upper-story window and then disposed of them. Most of the devices have been recovered, police said.

Another indictment, returned yesterday in a list of 34 presentments handed to Justice Peyton Gordon, in District Court, charged Levy Parker, colored, with first-degree murder. He is alleged to have fatally stabbed Sidney Thompson, also colored, last October during a row in the 300 block of K street southwest.

Accused of sending an obscene letter to President Roosevelt, Raymond Grant, now being held in Gallinger Hospital, was indicted for violation of postal regulations. The letter was allegedly mailed from Georgia last October 5.

Others indicted included William P. Sweeney and James Owens, joy riding; Stanley Koeniz and Millard Saunders, grand larceny; Herman Foster, John Stevenson, James Wilson, Edward Jones and Cornelius Brown, housebreaking; George Vick, Ethel Payne, James V. Psychiatrists Fail To Aid Mother, 21, Found in Hallway

Found semiconscious with her 2½-year-old daughter in a rooming house at 1004 N street northwest early yesterday, a 21-year-old mother was in Gallinger Hospital last night.

The woman was found slumped near the stairs by James Nickitiades, who told police he heard a noise in the hallway shortly before 5 a. m. Nickitiades said the child was lying at the bottom of the steps with a cut on her cheek. He carried both of them to his room and summoned police, who said the woman gave her name as Mrs. Lillian Millner, 21, of 711 N street northwest.

Later she was identified by her husband, Fred Hawkins, as Lillian Hawkins, of 1107 N street northwest.

Psychiatrists were unable to ascertain the woman's malady, and there were no marks of violence on her body. She has been unable to tell a coherent story and says she does not know what happened.

Rites for Col. Smith To Be Held Today

Funeral services for Lieut. Col. Frank Wilbur Smith, Quartermaster Corps Reserve, who died November 21 at his home in New York, will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock in Arlington National Cemetery, with full military honors. The funeral procession will start from the Fort Myer gate.

Honorary pallbearers will include Maj. Gen. William M. Wright, retired; Col. Warren W. Whiteside, Lieut. Cols. Brehon B. Somerville and John C. H. Lee; Dr. Oscar F. Dente and William Sipel.

Born in Pennsylvania in 1876, Col. Smith was commissioned from the First Officers' Training Camp, at Plattsburg, N. Y., and his first assignment was to command the supply train of the Eighty-ninth Division. He then was sent as a student to the Army Staff College in France. After his graduation he returned to the Eighty-ninth Division, where he served on the general staff.

One of the group who organized the American Legion in Paris, Col. Smith was commander of the John Puroy Mitchell Post, in New York, at the time of his death.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Rachel Ashton Smith; a daughter, Miss Constance Isabelle Smith, both of New York, and a sister, Mrs. A. C. Lodge, of Philadelphia.

Pacific Mutual Insurance Firm Is Reorganized

340,000 Policyholders in 42 States Eventually Will Benefit.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Dec. 3.—Superior Judge Henry M. Willis approved the California insurance commissioner's plan for rehabilitation of the $220,000,000 Pacific Mutual Insurance Co. today. The company has 340,000 policyholders in 42 States.

The plan extends full protection to holders of all policies except non-cancellable disability and provides 10 to 80 per cent reduction of benefits on this class, but offers a means by which full benefits may be restored eventually. Under the plan, policyholders may mutualize the company after 10 years.

Judge Willis' decision followed a six-weeks' hearing on an order to show cause why the plan should not be approved.

Competing with the commissioner's plan was one offered on behalf of the powerful Transamerica group by President L. M. Giannini of Occidental Life Insurance Co., Transamerica subsidiary.

Audience Digs Up Stagehands' Pay To Hear Rigoletto

The battle in the Civic Auditorium was won last night by termined and tuxedoed opera fans who assembled to hear the tribulations of Gilda in "Rigoletto."

Curtain time came and passed with no hint of behind-the-scenes trouble until a backstage voice boomed: "This show don't go on until somebody pays off."

The director general appeared to assure the audience all would be well as soon as funds to pay the musicians and stage-hand union workers could be raised.

Finally patrons contributed $116 and Gilda went on to her tragic destiny.

Snow Parking Ban Affects 52 Streets

Anticipating the snows of winter, the District Commissioners yesterday ordered night-time parking banned on 52 traffic arteries from December 20 until the snow season is ended.

Because the "emergency" ban was held invalid in Police Court last spring, the commissioners this year will utilize regular "no parking" signs. The ban will cover the hours from 2 to 8 a. m.

The winter parking prohibition was inaugurated several years ago so District snow removing trucks will not be hampered in their work, which begins long before daylight. Last year the ban was from January 1 to March 1, but this year the length of the ruling will depend upon the weather.

Freeman Says Religion Is Needed for Recovery

Religious and welfare recovery are indispensable to the recovery of the Nation as a whole, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, told the National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery at the Commodore Hotel, New York, yesterday.

"It may be that in these latter years we have not given religion as conspicuous a place in the program of recovery as we should," said Bishop Freeman. "It took a devastating depression to make us realize that religion, the practice of faith and trust in God, is indispensable with our individual and corporate well being."

Editor of Banned 'Scholastic' Assails School Board's Ruling

In a fiery telegram to Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, Maurice R. Robinson, editor of the school weekly, Scholastic, charged that the school trustees banned his magazine from Washington schools without giving him a promised hearing.

Robinson then assailed the board, which Wednesday voted adversely to a teachers' committee recommendation that the magazine be restored to the approved reading list, for reversing its previous stand and for allying "itself on the side of repression."

The editor, on hearing in his New York office that Scholastic had been banned in Washington for its pacifistic editorial attitude, declared that no wthe board will be "compelled to raid the high school libraries and eliminate innumerable standard books and periodicals that portray the insanity of war."

Even the words of President Roosevelt will have to be taken from the pupils' reach, he declared.

"They (the board members) will have to bar from the schools the speech of President Roosevelt at Chautauqua, N. Y., August 14, when he said: 'If we face the choice of profits or peace, the Nation must answer, We choose peace! It is the duty of all of us to encourage such a body of public opinion in this country that the answer will be clear and, for all practical purposes, unanimous.'"

Mrs. Doyle, after receiving Robinson's scathing telegram, denied that the editor had not had his chance to appear before the board. However, she said she replied to his wire, inviting him to speak to board members at their next meeting in two weeks.

"Mr. Robinson asked for a hearing when the teachers committee first reported on Scholastic last April," explained Mrs. Doyle. "And we invited him to come down. However, he did not do so, presumably because the committee's report was favorable to the magazine."

Cleared in Report.

That report, following an investigation to determine Scholastic's communistic tendencies, cleared the magazine, in the opinion of the teachers, of efforts through its articles and editorials, to indoctrinate pupils in the Soviet way of government.
